Legend 19 Clemence Dane

THE LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LOS ANGELES

GIFT OF

'rs. Charlotte Steiner

its way Bocks

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2008 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

NEW NOVELS

7/- net.

ELI. By C. M. PEAKE.

MISER'S MONEY. By EDEN PHILL-POTTS.

SAINT'S PROGRESS. By JOHN GALSWORTHY.

GOLD AND IRON. By Joseph Hergesheimer.

AN HONEST THIEF. By FYODOR DOSTOEVSKY.

BY

CLEMENCE DANE

AUTHOR OF "REGIMENT OF WOMEN," AND "FIRST THE BLADE"

LONDON: WILLIAM HEINEMANN

London : William Heinemann, 1919.

Messrs. Mitchell and Bent will shortly issue 'The Life of Madala Grey' by Anita Serle: a critical biography based largely on private correspondence and intimate personal knowledge.

That was in The Times a fortnight ago. And now the reviews are beginning—

The Cult of Madala Grey. . .

The Problem of Madala Grey. . .

The Secret of Madala Grey. . .

I wish they wouldn't. Oh, I wish they wouldn't. No admirer of the late Madala Grey's arresting art can fail to be absorbed by these intimate and unexpected revelations . . .

Delicately, unerringly, Miss Serle traces to its source the inspiration of that remarkable writer. . . And—this will please Anita most of all—

We ourselves have never joined in the chorus of praise that, a decade ago, greeted the appearance of 'Eden Walls' and its successors, and in our opinion Miss Serle, in her biographical enthusiasm, uses the word genius a little too often and too easily. Madala Grey has yet to be tried by that subtlest of literary critics, the Man with the Scythe. But whether or not we agree with Miss Serle's estimate of her heroine, there can be no two questions as to the literary value of the 'Life' itself. It definitely places Miss Serle among the Boswells, and as we close its fascinating pages we find ourselves wondering whether our grand-children will remember Miss Serle as the biographer of Madala Grey, or Madala Grey as the subject matter merely, of a chronicle that has become a classic.

That is to say—La reine est morte. Vive la reine! Anita will certainly be pleased. Well, I suppose she's got what she wants, what she's always wanted. She isn't a woman to change. The new portrait in the Bookman might have been taken when I knew her: the mouth's a trifle harder, the hair a trifle greyer; but no real change. But it amuses me that there should be her portrait in all the papers, and none of Madala Grey; not even in the Life itself. I can hear Anita's regretful explanations in her soft, convincing voice. She will make a useful little paragraph out of it—

Miss Serle, whose 'Life of Madala Grey' is causing no small stir in literary circles, tells us that the brilliant novelist had so great a dislike of being photographed that there is no record of her features in existence. An odd foible in one who, in our own recollection, was not only a popular writer but a strikingly beautiful woman.

And yet, from her heavy, solitary frame (we have no other pictures in our den) that 'beautiful woman,' with her flowered searf and her handful of cowslips, is looking down at this moment at me—at me, and the press cuttings, and The Times, and Anita's hateful book. And she says, unmistakeably—

'Does it matter? What does it matter?' laughing a little as she says it.

Then I laugh too, because Anita knows all about the portrait.

After all, does it matter? Does it matter what Anita says and does and writes? And why should I of all people grudge Anita her success? Honestly, I don't. And I don't doubt that the book is well written: not that I shall read it. There's no need: I know exactly what she will have written: I know how convincing it will be. But it won't be true. It won't be Madala Grey.

Of course Anita would say—'My dear Jenny, what do you know about it? You never even met her. You heard us, her friends, her intimates, talking about her for—how long? An hour? Two hours? And on the strength of that—that eaves-dropping five years ago' (I ean hear the nip in her voice still)' you are so amusing as to challenge my personal knowledge of my dearest friend. Possibly you contemplate writing the story of Madala Grey yourself? If so, pray send me a copy.' And then the swish of her skirt. She always wore trains in those days, and she always glided away before one could answer.

But I could answer. I remember that evening so well. I don't believe I've forgotten a word or a movement, and if I could only write it down, those two hours would tell, as Anita's book never will, the story of Madala Grey.

I ought to be able to write; because Anita is my mother's cousin; though I never saw her till I was eighteen.

Mother died when I was eighteen.

If she had not been ill so long it would have been harder. As it was—but there's no use in writing down that black time. Afterwards I didn't know what to do. The pension had stopped, of course. I'd managed to teach myself typing, though Mother couldn't be left much; but I didn't know shorthand, and I couldn't get work, and my money was dwindling, and I was getting scared. I was ready to worship Anita when her letter came. She was sorry about Mother and she wanted a secretary. If I could type I could come.

I remember how excited I was. I'd always lived in such a tiny place and we couldn't afford Mudie's. To go to London, and meet interesting people, and live with a real writer, seemed too good to be true. And it helped that Anita and her mother were relations. Mother used to stay with Great-aunt Serle when she was little. Somehow that made things easier to me when I was missing Mother more than usual.

In the end, after all those expectations, I was only three weeks with Anita. They were a queer three weeks. I was afraid of her. She was one of those people who make you feel guilty. But she was kind to me. I typed most of the day, for she was a fluent worker and never spared either of us; but she took me to the theatre once, and I used to pour out when interesting people came to tea. In the first fortnight I met nine novelists and a poet; but I never found out who they were, because they all called each other by their Christian names and you couldn't ask Anita questions. She had such a way of asking you why you asked. She used to glide about the room in a cloud of ehiffon and cigarette smoke-she had half-shut pale eyes just the colour of the smoke—and pour out a stream of beautiful English in a pure cool voice; but if they interrupted her she used to stiffen and stop dead and in a minute she had glided away and begun to talk to someone else. Old Mrs. Serle used to sit in a corner and knit. She never dropped a stitch; but she always had her eves on Anita. She was different from the rest of my people. She had an accent, not cockney exactly, but odd. She had had a hard life, I believe. Mother said of her once that her courage made up for everything. But she never told me what the everything was. Greataunt's memory was shaky. One day she would scarcely know you, and another day she would be sensible and kind, very kind. She liked parties. People used to come and talk to her because she made them laugh; but every now and then, when Anita was being brilliant about something, she would put up her long gnarled finger and say-' Hush! Listen to my daughter!' and her eyes would twinkle. But I never knew if she were proud of her or not.

Everybody said that Anita was brilliant. She could take a book to pieces so that you saw every good bit and every bad bit separated away into little compartments. But she spoiled things for you, books and people, at least she did for me. She sneered. She said of the Baxter girl once, for instance—'She's really too taetful. If you go to tea with her you are sure to be introduced to your oldest friend.' And again—'She always likes the right people for the wrong reasons.'

Of course one knows what she meant, but I liked the Baxter girl all the same. Beryl Baxter—but everyone called her the Baxter girl. She was kind to me because I was Anita's cousin, and she used to talk to me when Anita wasn't in the mood for her. She asked me to call her 'Beryl' almost at once. Anita used to be awfully rude to her sometimes, and then again she would have her to supper and spend an evening going through her MSS. and I could tell that she was giving her valuable help. The Baxter girl used to listen and agree so eagerly and take it away to re-write. I thought she was dreadfully grateful. I hated to hear her. And when she was gone Anita would lean back in her chair with a dead look on her face and say—

"God help her readers! Jenny, open the window. That girl reeks of patchouli." And then —"Why do I waste my time?"

And Great-aunt Serle in her corner would chuckle and poke and mutter, but not loud—

"Why does she waste her time? Listen to my daughter!"

The next time the Baxter girl came Anita would hardly speak to her.

The Baxter girl seemed to take it as a matter of course. But once she said to me, with a look on her face as if she were defending herself—

"Ah—but you don't write. You're not keen. You don't know what it means to be in the set."

"But such heaps of people come to see Anita," I said, "people she hardly knows."

"They're only the fringes," said the Baxter girl complacently. "They're not in the Grey set. They don't come to the Nights. At least, only a few. Jasper Flood, of course—you've met him, haven't you?—and Lila Howe—Masquerade, you know, and Sir Fortinbras." The Baxter girl always ticketed everyone she mentioned. "And the Whitneys. She used to stay with the Whitneys. And Roy Huth. And of course Kent Rehan."

"Kent Rehan?"

"The Kent Rehan," said the Baxter girl.

Then I remembered. The vicar's wife always sent Mother the Academy catalogue after she had been up to town. I used to cut out the pictures I liked, and I liked Kent Rehan's. They had wind blowing through them, and sunshine, and jolly blobs that I knew must be raw colour, and always the same woman. But you could never see her face, only a cheek curve or a shoulder line. They were in the catalogue every year, and so I told the Baxter girl. She laughed.

"Yes, he's always on the line. Anita says that's the worst she knows of him. And of course the veiled lady——" she laughed again, knowingly, "But there is one full face, I believe. The Spring Song he ealls it. But it's never been shown. Anita's seen it. She told me. He keeps it locked away in his studio. They say he's in love with her."

"With whom?"

"Madala Grey, of course."

I said—

"Who is Madala Grey?"

The Baxter girl had sunk into the eushions until she was prone. I had been wondering with the bit of mind that wasn't listening what the people at home would have said to her, with her cobweb stockings (it was November) and her coloured combs and her sprawl. It was a relief to see her sit up suddenly.

"' Who's Madala Grey!'" Her mouth stayed open after she'd finished the sentence.

"Yes," I said. "Who is she?"

"You mean to say you've never heard of Madala Grey? You've never read Eden Walls? Is there anyone in England who hasn't read Eden Walls?"

"Heaps," I said. She annoyed me. She—they—they all thought me a fool at Anita's.

The Baxter girl sighed luxuriously.

"My word, I envy you! I wish I was reading

Eden Walls for the first time—or Ploughed Fields. I don't care so much about The Resting-place." She laughed. "At least—one's not supposed to care about The Resting-place, you know. It's as much as one's life's worth—one's literary life."

"What's wrong with it?"

"Sentimental. Anita says so. She says she doesn't know what happened to her over The Resting-place."

"I like the title," I said.

"Yes, so do I. And I love the opening where—Oh, but you haven't read it. And you're Anita's cousin! What a comedy! Just like Anita though, not to speak of her."

"Why? Doesn't Anita like her?"

The Baxter girl was flat on the cushions again. She looked at me with those furtive eyes that always so strangely qualified her garrulity.

"Are you shrewd? Or was that chance?"

" What?"

"' Doesn't Anita like her?"

"Doesn't she then?"

"Ah, now you're asking! Officially, very much. Too much, I should say. And too much is just the same as the other thing, I think. Would you like Anita for your bosom friend?"

Naturally I said-

"Anita's been very kind to me." Anita's my cousin, after all. I didn't like the Baxter girl's tone.

"Oh, she's been kind to me." The Baxter girl eaught me up quickly. She was like a sensitive plant for all her crudity. "Oh, I admire Anita. She's the finest judge of style in England. Jasper Flood says so. You mustn't think I say a word against Anita. Very kind to me she's been." Then, innocently, but her eyes were flickering again—"She was kind to Madala too, till—"

"Well?" I demanded.

"Till Madala was kind to her. Madala's one of those big people. She'll never forget what she owes Anita—what Anita told her she owed her. After she made her own name, she made Anita's. Anita, being Anita, doesn't forget that."

"How d'you mean-made Anita's name?"

"Well, look at the people who come here—the people who count. What do you think the draw was? Anita? Oh yes, now. But they came first for Madala. Oh, those early days when Eden Walls was just out! Of course Anita had sense for ten. She ran Madala for all she was worth."

"Then you do like Madala Grev?"

"I?" The Baxter girl looked at me oddly. "She read my book. She wrote to me. That's why Anita took me up. She let me come to the Nights. She started them, you know. Somebody reads a story or a poem, and then it's talk till the milkman comes. Good times! But now Madala's married she doesn't come often. Anita carries on like grim death, of course. But it's not the same. Last month it was dreary."

" Is it every month?"

"Yes. It's tomorrow again. Tomorrow's Sunday, isn't it? It'll amuse you. You'll come, of course, as you're in the house."

"Will she? Herself?" I found myself reproducing the Baxter girl's eagerness.

"Not now." The common voice had deepened queerly. "She's very ill." She hesitated. "That's why I came today. I thought Anita might have heard. Not my business, of course, but——"She made an awkward, violent gesture with her hands. "Oh, a genius oughtn't to marry. It's wicked waste. Well, so long! See you tomorrow night!"

She left me abruptly.

I found myself marking time, as it were, all through that morrow, as if the evening were of great importance. The Baxter girl was always unsettling, or it may have been Anita's restlessness that affected me. Anita was on edge. She was writing, writing, all the morning. She was at her desk when I came down. There was a mass of packets and papers in front of her and an empty coffee cup. I believe she had been writing all night. She had that white look round her eyes. But she didn't need any typing done. Early in the afternoon she went out and at once Great-aunt, in her corner, put down her knitting with a little catch of her breath. But she didn't talk: she sat watching the door. I had been half the day at the window, fascinated by the fog. I'd never seen a London fog before. I found myself writing a letter in my head to Mother about it, about the way it would change from black to yellow and then clear off to let in daylight and sparrow-talk and the tramp-tramp of feet, and then back again to silence, and the sun like a ball that you could reach up to with your hand and hold. I was deep in my description—and then, of a sudden, I remembered that she wasn't there to write to any more. It was so hard to remember always that she was dead. I got up quickly and went to Anita's shelves for a book. Great-aunt hadn't noticed anything. She was still watching the door.

The little back room that opened on to the stairease was lined to the ceiling with books, all so tidy and alphabetical. Anita lived for books, but I used to wonder why. She didn't love them. Her books never opened friendlily at special places, and they hadn't the proper smell. I ran my finger along the 'G's' and pulled out Eden Walls.

I began in the middle of course. One always falls into the middle of a real person's life, and a book is a person. There's always time to find out their beginning afterwards when you've decided to be friends. It isn't always worth while. But it was with Eden Walls. I liked the voice in which the story was being told. Soon I began to feel happier. Then I began to feel excited. It said things I'd always thought, you know. It was extraordinary that it knew how I felt about things.

There's a bit where the heroine comes to town and the streets scare her, because they go on, and on, and on, always in straight lines, like a corridor in a dream. Now how did she know of that dream? I turned back to the first page and began to read steadily.

When Anita's voice jerked me back to real life it was nearly dark. She was speaking to Great-aunt as she took off her wraps—

- "The fog's confusing. I had to take a taxi to the tube. A trunk eall is an endless business."
 - "Well?" said Great-aunt.
 - "Nothing fresh."
 - "Did he answer?"

Anita nodded.

"Was he——? Is she——? Did you ask——? What did he tell you, Anita?"

Anita stabbed at her hat with her long pins. She was flushing.

"The usual details. He spares you nothing. Have you had tea, Mother?" She rang the bell.

Great-aunt beat her hand on the arm of her chair in a feeble, restless way. When I brought her tea she said to me in her confidential whisper—

"Give it to my daughter. She's tired. She'll tell us when she's not so tired."

She settled herself again to watch; but she watched Anita, not the door.

And in a few minutes Anita did say, as the Baxter girl had said—

"She's very ill." And then—"I always told you we ought to have a telephone. I can't be running out all the evening."

"Do they come tonight?" said Great-aunt Serle. Anita answered her coldly—

"They do. Why not?"

Great-aunt tittered.

"Why not? Why not? Listen, little Jenny!" Anita, as usual, was quite patient.

"Mother, you mustn't excite yourself. Jenny, give Mother some more tea. What good would it do Madala to upset my arrangements? Besides, Kent will have the latest news. I think you may trust him." She gave that little laugh that was Great-aunt's titter grown musical. Then she turned to me.

"By the way, Jenny, I expect friends tonight. You needn't change, as you're in mourning. You'll see to the coffee, please. We'll have the door open and the coffee in the little room. You might do it now while I dress."

The big drawing-room was divided from the little outer room by a curtained door. It was closed in the day-time for cosiness' sake, but when it was flung back the room was a splendid one. The small room held the books and a chair or two, and a chesterfield facing the door that opened on to the passage and the narrow twisting stairs. They were so dark that Anita kept a candle and matches in the hall; but one seldom troubled to light it. It was quicker to fumble one's way. Anita used to long for electric light; but she would not install it. Anita had good taste. The house was old, and old-fashioned it should stay.

I fastened back the door and re-arranged the furniture, and was sitting down to Eden Walls again when Great-aunt beckoned me.

- "Go and dress, my dear!"
- "But Anita said—" I began.

She held me by the wrist, all nods and smiles and hoarse whispers.

"The pretty dress—to show a pretty throat—isn't there a pretty dress somewhere? I know! Put it on. Put it on. What a white throat! I've a necklace somewhere—but then Anita would know. Mustn't tell Anita!"

She pulled me down to her with fumbling, shaky hands.

- "Tell me, Jenny, where's my daughter?"
- " Upstairs, Auntie."
- "Tell me, Jenny any news? Any news, Jenny?"

I didn't know what to say to her. I was afraid of hurting her. She was so shaking and pitiful.

- " Is it about Miss Grey, Auntie?"
- "Carey, Jenny—Carey. Mrs. John Carey. Good name. Good man. But Anita don't like him. Anita won't tell me. You tell me, Jenny!"
- "Auntie, it's all right. It's all right. She'll tell you, of course, when she hears again." And I soothed her as well as I could, till she let me loosen her hand from my wrist, and kiss her, and start her at her knitting again, so that I could finish making ready the room. But as I went to wash my hands she called to me once more.

"Yes, Auntie?"

"Put it on, Jenny. Don't ask my daughter. Put it on."

She was a queer old woman. She made me want to cry sometimes. She was so frightened always, and yet so game.

But I went upstairs after supper and put on the frock she liked. Black, of course, but with Mother's lace fichu I liked myself in it too. I did my hair high. I don't know why I took so much trouble except that I wanted to cheer myself up. It had been a depressing day in spite of Eden Walls. I looked forward to the stir of vis Jrs. And then I was curious to see Kent Rehan.

When I came down the Baxter girl was already there, standing all by herself at the fire. She was strikingly dressed; but she looked stranded. I wondered if Anita had been snubbing her.

Anita was shaking hands with Mr. Flood and with a lady whom I had not seen before. She was blonde, with greenish-golden hair and round eyes, very black eyes that had no lights in them, not even when she smiled. She often smiled. She had a drawling voice and hardly spoke at all, except to Mr. Flood. If he talked to anyone else or walked away from her, she would watch him for a minute, and then say—'Jasper' with a sort of purr, not troubling to raise her voice. But he always heard and came. She wore a wonderful Chinese shawl, white, with gold dragons worked on it, and whenever she moved it set the dragons crawling. She was powdered and red-lipped like a clown, and I didn't really like her, but nevertheless there was something about her that was queerly attractive. When she smiled at me because I gave her coffee, I felt quite elated. But I didn't like her. Mr. Flood called her 'Blanche.' I never heard her other name.

Anita seemed very pleased to see them. I caught scraps.

"Am so glad—one's friends about one—such a strain waiting for news. I phoned this afternoon. No, the usual phrases. Anxious, of course, but I should certainly have heard if— Good of you to come! No chance of the Whitneys, I'm afraid—too much fog. And what are you reading to us?"

The Baxter girl, as I greeted her, stripped and re-dressed me with one swift look.

"My dear, it suits you! I wish I could look Victorian. But I'm vile in black. Have you seen Lila? I met her on the step. They've turned down Sir Fortinbras in America. Isn't it rotten luck? Anita said they would. Anita's always right. Any more news of Madala?"

Anita overheard her. She was suddenly gracious to the Baxter girl.

"You may be sure I should always let you know at once. And what is this I hear about Lila? Poor Lila! It's the last chapter, I'm afraid. I advised her from the beginning that the American public will not tolerate—but dear Lila is a law unto herself." And then, as Miss Howe came in—"Lila, my dear! How good of you to venture! A night like this makes me wonder why I continue in London. Madala has urged me to move out ever since——No. No news. But Jasper's been energetie——"She circled mazily about them while I brought the coffee.

"Kent coming?" said Mr. Flood, fumbling with his papers.

Anita shrugged her shoulders.

"Who can account for Kent? It may dawn on him that he's due here—and again, it may not. It depends as usual, I suppose, on the new picture."

"Oh yes, there's a new one," recollected the Baxter girl carefully.

"There must be! He was literally floceulent yesterday." Miss Howe chuckled. "That can only mean one of two things. Art or——"

"—the lady! Who can doubt? Well, if Carey doesn't object to his brotherly love continuing, I'm sure I don't. But I wish it need not involve his missing his appointments." Mr. Flood eyed his typescript impatiently.

Anita was instantly all taet.

"Oh, we won't wait. Certainly not. Pull in to the fire. Now, Jasper!"

But Miss Howe, as she swirled into Anita's special ehair, her skirts overflowing either arm, abolished Mr. Flood and his typescript with a movement of her soft dimply hands.

"Oh, I'm not in the mood even for Jasper's efforts. I want to let myself go. I want to damn publishers—and husbands! Damn them! Damn them! There! Am I shocking you, Miss Summer?" She smiled at me over their heads. She was always polite to me. I liked her. She was like a fat, pink pacony.

"Well, if you take my advice-" began Anita.

"My darling, I love you, but I don't want your advice. I only want one person's advice—ever—and she has got married and is doing her duty in that state of life—— Hence I say—Damn husbands! I tell you I want Madala to soothe me, and storm at the injustice of publishers for me, and then—no, not give me a brilliant idea for the last chapter, but make me tell her one, and then applaud me for it. You know, Anita!" She dug at her openly.

I caught a movement in Great-aunt's corner.

"Coffee, Auntie?"

She gave me a goblin glanee.

"My daughter!" She had an air of introducing her triumphantly. "Listen! She don't like fat women."

We listened. Anita's voice was mellow with cordiality.

"Yes indeed. Madala has often said to me that she thought you well worth encouraging."

Miss Howe laughed jollily.

- "I admire your articles, Nita. I wilt when you review me. But you'll never write novels, darling. You've not the ear. Madala may have said that, but she didn't say it in that way."
 - "She certainly said it."
 - "Some day I'll ask her."
- "Some day! Oh, some day!" The Baxter girl was staring at the fire. "Shall we ever get her back?"
- "In a year! Let us give her a year!" Mr. Flood looked up at the lady beside him with a thin smile. I couldn't bear him. He sat on the floor, and he ealled you 'dear lady,' and sometimes he would take hold of your wateh-chain and finger it as he talked to you. But he was awfully elever, I believe. He wrote reviews and very difficult poetry that didn't rhyme. Anita was generally mellifluous to him and she quoted him a good deal. She turned to him with just the same smile—
 - "Ah, of course! You've met John Carey too."
 - "For my sins, dear lady-for my sins."
- "Not the same sins, surely," breathed the blonde lady.
- "As the virtuous Carey's? Don't be rude to me! It's a fact—the man's a churchwarden. He carries a little tin plate on Sundays! Didn't you tell me so, Anita? No—we give her a year. Don't we, Anita?"

"But what did she marry him for?" wailed the Baxter girl.

They all laughed.

"Copy, dear lady, copy!" Mr. Flood was enjoying himself. "Why will you have ideals? Carey was a new type."

"But she needn't have married him!" insisted the Baxter girl. The argument was evidently an old one.

"She, if I read her aright, could have dispensed with the ceremony, but the churchwarden had his views. Obviously! Can't you imagine him—all whiskers and wedding-ring?"

"But I thought he was clean-shaven! I thought he was good-looking!" I sympathized with the Baxter girl's dismay.

"Ah—I speak in parables——"

"You do hate him, don't you?" said Miss Howe with her wide, benevolent smile. "Now, I wonder——"

Mr. Flood flushed into disclaimers, while the woman beside him looked at Miss Howe with half-closed eyes.

"I? How could I? Our orbits don't touch. I approved, I assure you. An invaluable experience for our Madala! A year of wedded love, another of wedded boredom, and then — a master-piece, dear people! Madala Grey back to us, a giantess refreshed. Gods! what a book it will be!"

"I wonder," said Miss Howe vaguely.

Anita answered her with that queer movement of the head that always reminded me of a pouncing lizard.

"No need! I've watched Madala Grey's career from the beginning."

"For this I maintain—"Mr. Flood ignored her—
"Eden Walls and Ploughed Fields may be amazing
(The Resting-place I cut out. It's an indiscretion.
Madala caught napping) but they're preliminaries, dear people! mere preliminaries, believe me."

"I sometimes wonder——" Miss Howe made me think of Saladin's cushion in The Talisman. She always went on so softly and imperviously with her own thoughts—" Suppose now, that she's written herself out, and knows it?"

The Baxter girl gave a little gasp of horrified appreciation.

"So the marriage——?"

" An emergency exit."

But Anita pitied them aloud-

"It shows how little you know Madala, either of you."

"Does anyone? Do you?"

Anita smiled sceurely.

"The type's clear, at least." Mr. Flood looked round the circle. His eyes shone. "Une grande amoureuse—that I've always maintained. Carey may be the first—but he won't be the last."

"Is he the first? How did she come to write The Resting-place then? Tell me that!" Anita thrust at him with her forefinger and behind her, in the corner, I saw the gesture duplicated.

"So I will when I've read the new book, dear lady."

"If ever it writes itself," Miss Howe underlined him.

"As to that—I give her a year, as I say. Once this business is over—" his voice mellowed into kindliness—" and good luck to her, dear woman——"

"Ah, good luck!" said Miss Howe and smiled at him.

"Once it's over, I say-"

"But she will be all right, won't she?" said the Baxter girl.

"I should certainly have been told——" began Anita.

Miss Howe harangued them-

"Have you ever known Madala Grey fail yet? She'll be all right. She'll pull it off—triumphantly. You see! But as for the book—if it comes——"

"When it comes," corrected Mr. Flood.

"What's that?" said Anita sharply.

There was a sound in the passage, a heavy sound of feet. It caught at my heart. It was a sound that I knew. They had come tramping up the stairs like that when they fetched away Mother.

Thud—stumble—thud! I shivered. But as the steps came nearer they belonged to but one man. The door opened and the fog and the man entered together. Everyone turned to him with a queer long flash of faces.

"Kent!" eried Anita, welcoming him. Then her voice changed. "Kent! What's wrong? What is it?"

He shut the door behind him and stood, his back against it, staring at us, like a man stupified.

The Baxter girl broke in shrilly-

"He's wired. He's had a wire!" She pointed at his elenched hand.

Then he, too, looked down at his own hand. His fingers relaxed slowly and a crush of red and grey paper slid to the floor.

"A son," he said dully.

"Ah!" A cry from the corner by the fire eased the tension. Great-aunt Serle was clapping her hands together. Her face was wrinkled all over with delight. "The good girl! The pretty—And a son too! A little son! Oh, the good girl!"

Anita turned on her, her voice like a scourge—

"Be quiet, Mother!" Then—"Well, Kent? Well?"

"Well?" he repeated after her.

"Madala? How's Madala? What about Madala Grey?"

"Dead!" he said.

Dead. The word fell amongst the group of us in the circle of lamp-light, like a plummet into a pool. Dead. For an instant one could hear the blank drop of it. Then we broke up into gestures and little cries, into a babel of dismay and concern and rather horrible excitement.

Instinctively I separated myself from them. was neither bad news nor good news to me, but it recalled to me certain hours, and they-it was as if they enjoyed the importance of bereavement. Anita talked. Miss Howe was gulping, and dabbing at her eyes. The Baxter girl kept on saying-'Dead?' 'Dead?' under her breath, and with that wide nervous smile that you sometimes see on people's faces when they are far enough away from laughter. Great-aunt had shrunk into her corner. I could barely see her. The blonde lady had her hand on her heart and was panting a little, as if she had been running, and yet, as always, she watched Mr. Flood. He had pulled out a note-book and a fountain-pen and was shaking at it furiously, while his little eyes flickered from one to another-even to me. I felt his observance pursue me to the very edge of the ring of light, and drop again, baulked by the dazzle, as I slipped past him into the swinging shadows beyond. It's odd how lamplight cuts a room in two: I could see every corner of the light and shadow alike, and even the outer room was not too dim for me to move about it easily; but to those directly under the lamp I knew I had become all but invisible, a blur among the other blurs that were curtains and pictures and chairs. They remembered me as little as, absorbed and clamorous, they remembered the man who had brought them their news, and then had brushed his way through question and comment to the deep alcove of the window in the outer room and there stood, rigid and withdrawn, staring out through the uncurtained pane at the solid night beyond. I could not see his face, only the outline of a big and clumsy body, and a hand that twitched and fumbled at the tassel of the blind.

And all the while Anita, white as paper, was talking, talking, talking, saying how great the shock was, and how much Miss Grey had been to her—a stream of sorrow and self-assertion. It was just as if she said—' Don't forget that this is far worse for me than for any of you. Don't forget——'

But the others went on with their own thoughts. "Dead? Gone? It's not possible." Miss Howe was all blubbered and deplorable. "What shall we do without her?"

"Yes—that's it!" The Baxter girl edged-in her chair to her like a young dog asking for comfort.

"For that matter, from the point of view of literature," Anita's voice grated, "she died a year ago."

"It's not possible! That's what I say—it's not possible!" It was strange how even the Baxter girl ignored Anita. "Dead! I can't grasp it. It's—it's too awful. She was so vivid."

"Awful?" Mr. Flood was biting his fingers. "Awful? Nothing of the kind. You know that Holbein cut—no, it's earlier stuff—'Death and the Lady,' crude, preposterous. And that's what it is. Old Bones and Madala Grey? That's not tragedy, that's farce! Farce, dear people, farce!" Then his high tripping voice broke suddenly. "Dead? Why, she wasn't thirty!"

"She was twenty-six last June," said Anita finally. "Midsummer Day. I know."

"June!" He caught it up. "Just so—June! Isn't that characteristic? Isn't that Madala all over? Of course she was born in June. She would be. She was June. June——

Her lips and her roses yet maiden, A summer of storm in her eyes——"

Miss Howe winced.

"For God's sake don't Swinburnize, Jasper! She's not your meat. Oh, I want to cry—I want to cry! Dead—at twenty-six——"

"In child-bed," finished Anita bitterly, and her voice made it an unclean and shameful end.

Mr. Flood's glance felt its way over her, hatefully. It never lifted to her face.

"Of course from your point of view, dear lady——" he began, and smiled as he made his little bow of attention.

I thought him insolent, and so, I believe, did Miss Howe. She lifted her head sharply and I thought she would have spoken; but Anita gave her no time.

There was always a sort of thick-skinned valliance about Anita.

"Oh, but you all know my point of view. She knew it herself. I never conecaled it. You know how I devoted myself—"

"A bye-word, a bye-word!" said Miss Howe under her breath.

"—but not so much to her as to her gift. I should never allow a personal sentiment to overpower me. I haven't the time for it. But she had the call, she had the gift, and because she had it I say, as I have always said, that for Madala Grey, marriage——"

"And all it implies——" Mr. Flood was still smiling.

She accepted it.

"Marriage and all that it implies was apostasy. I stand for Literature."

"And Literature," with a glance at the others, "is honoured."

They wearied me. It seemed to me that they sparked and fizzled and whirred with the sham life of machinery: and like machinery they affected me. For at first I could not hear anything but them, and then they confused and tired me, and last of all they faded into a mere wall-paper of sound, and I forgot that they were there, save that I wondered now and then, as stray sentences shrilled out of the buzz, that they were not yet oppressed into silence.

For there was grief abroad—a grief without shape, without sound, without expression—a quality, a pulsing essence, a distillation of pure pain. From some centre it rayed out, it spread, it settled upon the room, imperceptibly, like the fall of dust. It reached me. I felt it. It soaked into me. I ached with it. I could not sit quiet. I was not drawn, I was impelled. Dead—the dull bewildered voice was still in my cars. That I heard. But it was statement, not appeal. It was not his suffering that demanded relief, but some responding capacity for pain in me that awoke and cried out restlessly that such anguish was unlawful, beyond endurance, that still it I must, I must!

I rose. I looked round me. Then I went very softly into the outer room.

He was still standing at the window. The street lamp, level with the sill, was quenched to a yellow gloom. It lit up the wet striped branches and dead bobbins of the plane-tree beside it, and the sickly undersides of its shrivelled last leaves. I never thought a tree could look so ghastly. Against that unnatural glitter and the luminous thick air the man and the half-drawn curtain stood out in solid, unfamiliar bulk of black.

I came and stood just behind him. He was so big that I only reached his shoulder. He may have heard me: I think he did; but he did not turn. I was not frightened of him. That was so queer, because as a rule I can't talk to strangers. I get nervous and red, and foolish-tongued, especially with men. Of course I knew all the usual men, the doctor at home, and the church people, and husbands that came back by the five-thirty, and now all Anita's friends, and Mr. Flood; but I never had anything to say to them or they to me. But with Kent Rehan, somehow, it was different. He was different. I never thought—'This is a strange man.' I never thought—'He doesn't know me: it's impertinent to break in upon him: what will he think?' I never thought of all that. I never thought about myself at all. I was just passionately desiring to help him and I didn't know how to do it.

I think I stood there for four or five minutes, trying to find words, opening my lips, and then eatching back the phrase before a sound came, because it seemed so poor and meaningless. And all the while the Baxter girl's words were running in my head—'They say he was in love with her.'

With her—with Madala Grey. She was the key. I had the strangest pang of interest in this unknown woman. Who was she? What was she? What had she been? What had she done so to centre herself in so many, in such alien lives? What had she in common for them all? Books, books, books—I'd never heard of her books! And she was married. Yet the loss of her, unpossessed, could bring such a look (as he turned restlessly from the window at last) such a look to Kent Rehan's face.

I was filled with a sort of anger against that dead woman, and I envied her. I never saw a man look so—as if his very soul had been bruised. It was not, it was never, a weak face, and it was not a young one; yet in that instant I saw in it, and clearly, its own forgotten childhood, bewildered by its first encounter with pain. It was that fleeting look that touched me so and gave me courage, so that I found myself saying to him, very low and quickly, and with a queer authority—

"It won't always hurt so much. It will get easier. I promise you it will. It does. Truly it does. In six months—I do know."

He looked down at me strangely.

I went on because I had to, but it was difficult. It was desperately difficult. I could hear myself blundering and stammering, and using hateful slangy phrases that I never used as a rule.

"I had to tell you. It isn't cheek. I know—it hurts like fun. It'll be worst out of doors. You see them coming, you see them just ahead of you, and then it isn't them. But it won't always hurt so horribly. I promise you. One manages. One gets used to living with it. I know."

He looked at my black dress.

"Your husband?"

"No. Mother."

He said no more. But he did not go away from me. We stood side by side at the window.

The voices in the other room insisted themselves into my mind again, against my will, like the ticking of a clock in the night. I was thinking about him, not them. But Anita called to me to put coal on the fire and, once among them, I did not like to go back to him again.

They had re-grouped themselves at the hearth. Miss Howe was in the chair with the chintz cover that was as pink and white and blue-ribboned as she herself. The Baxter girl erouched on the pouf and the fire-light danced over her by fits and starts till, what with her violet dress and her black boy's head with the green band in it and that orange glow upon her, she looked like one of the posters in the Tube. The blonde lady had pushed back her chair to the edge of the lamp-light, so that her face was a blur and her white dress vellow-grey. Her knees made a back for Mr. Flood sitting cross-legged at her feet, and watching the Baxter girl as if he admired her. Once the blonde lady put her hand on his shoulder, and he eaught it and played with the rings on it while he listened to her, and yet still watched the Baxter girl. She went on whispering, her hand in his, till at last he put back his head and caught her eye and laughed. Then she leaned back again as if she were satisfied. But I thought—' How I should hate to have that dank hair rubbing against my skirt.' Beside Mr. Flood lay the MS. he had brought, but I think Anita had forgotten it. She, sitting at the table in her high-backed chair (she never lolled), was still talking, indeed they were all talking about this Madala Grey. Anita's voice was as pinched as her face.

"Oh, I knew from the first what it would be! She could never do anything by halves. She had no moderation. The writing, the work, all that made her what she was, tossed aside, for a whim, for a madness, for a man. I can't help it—it makes me bitter."

"Do you grudge it her so?" The Baxter girl looked at her wonderingly. "I kicked at it too, of course. We all did, didn't we? But now, I like to think how happy she looked the last time she came here. Do you remember? I liked that blue frock. And the scarf with the roses—I gave her that. Liberty. She was thin though. She always worked too hard. Poor Madala! Heigh-ho, the gods are jealous gods."

Anita stared in front of her.

"Just gods. She served two masters. She was bound to pay."

"You are hard," said the Baxter girl in a low voice.

Miss Howe rocked herself.

"But don't you know how she feels? I do. It's the helplessness——"

Anita's pale eye met and held her glance as if she resented that sympathy. Then, as if indeed she were suddenly grown weak, she acquiesced.

"I suppose so. Yes, it's the helplessness. 'If this didn't happen '-- 'If that weren't so '-Little things, little things-and they govern one. A broken doll—a cowslip ball—stronger than all my strength. And she needn't have met Carey. It was just a chance. If I'd known-that day! I used to ask her questions, just to make her talk. I remember asking her about her old home-more to set her off than anything. I said I'd like to see it some day. It was true. I was interested. But it was only to make her talk. But she-oh, you know how she foamed up about a thing. 'My old home! Would you, Anita? Would you like to come? Wouldn't it bore you, Anita? It's all spoiled, you know. But I go down now and then. Nobody remembers me. It's like being a ghost. Oh, I feel for ghosts. Would you really like to come? Shall we go soon? Shall we go today?' And then, of course, down we go. And then we meet Carey. And then the play begins."

D

Miss Howe shook her head.

"Ends."

Anita accepted it.

"Ends. Then the play ends." And then, frowning—"If I'd known that day—if I'd known! I was warned, too. That's strange. I've never thought of it from that day to this. If I were an old wife now——" She shivered.

"What happened?" said the Baxter girl euriously.

"Oh well, off we went! We had a carriage to ourselves. I was glad. I thought she might talk."

"And you always tried to make her talk," said Miss Howe softly.

Anita went on without answering her.

"She grew quite excited as we travelled down, talking about her 'youth.' She always spoke as if she were a hundred."

"She put something into that youth of hers, I shouldn't wonder," said Miss Howe.

"She did. The things she told me that day. I knew she had been in America, but I never dreamed—— She landed there, if you please, without a penny in her pocket, without a friend in the world."

"I never understood why she went to America," said Miss Howe. "I asked her once."

"What did she say?" said Anita curiously.

"To make her fortune. But I never got any details out of her."

"Didn't you know?" said Anita. "Her people emigrated. The father failed. It happened when Madala was eighteen, and she and her mother persuaded him, expecting him, literally, to make their fortunes. The mother seems to have been an erratic person. Irish, I believe. Beautiful. Extravagant. I have always imagined that it was her extravagance—but Madala and the husband seem to have adored her. I remember Madala saying once that her father had been born unlucky, 'except when he married Mother!' I suspect, myself, that that was the beginning of his ill-luck.

Anyhow, when the crash came, they gathered together what they had and started off on some romantic notion of the mother's to make their fortune farming. America. Steerage. The Sylvania."

"Sylvania? That's familiar. What was it? A collision, wasn't it?"

"No, that was the Empress of Peru. The Sylvania eaught fire in mid-ocean—a ghastly business. There were only about fifty survivors. Both her people were drowned."

"Oh, that's what she meant," began Miss Howe, "that time at the Aeademy. We were looking at a storm-scape, and she said—'People don't know. It's not like that. They wouldn't try to paint it if they knew.' She was quite white. Of course I never dreamed——Poor old Madala! Well, what happened?"

"Oh, she reached America in what she stood up in. There was a survivors' fund, of course, but money melts in a city when you're strange to it."

"Couldn't she have come back to England?"

"I believe she had relations over here, but her mother had quarrelled with them all in turn. They didn't appreciate her mother and that was the unforgivable sin for Madala. She'd have starved sooner than ask them to help her. I shouldn't wonder if she did, too!—half starve anyway. I shouldn't wonder if those first bare months haven't revenged themselves at last."

"Oh, if one had known!" began the Baxter girl. "How is it that no-one ever knows—or cares?"

"You? You were a schoolgirl. Who had heard of her in those days? But she made friends. There was a girl, a journalist, who had been sent to interview the survivors. She seems to have helped her in the beginning. She found her a lodging—oh, can't you see how she uses that lodging in Eden Walls?—and gave her occasional hack jobs, typing, and now and then proof-reading. Then she got some work taken, advertisement work, little articles on soaps and seents and face-creams that she used to illustrate herself. She was comically proud of them. She kept them all."

"I suppose in her spare time she was already working at Eden Walls?"

"No. I asked her. And she said—'Oh no, I was too miserable. Oh, Anita, I was miserable.' And then she began again telling funny stories about her experiences. No, she was back in England before she began Eden Walls. However, she seems to have made quite a little income at last, even to have saved. And then, just when she began to see her way before her to a sort of security, then she threw it all up and came home."

- "Just like Madala! But why?"
- "Heaven knows! Home-sick, she said."
- "But she hadn't got a home!"
- "It was England-the English country-the south country—the Westering Hill country. She used to talk about it like—like a lover."

- "Isn't that more probable?" said Mr. Flood.
- "What?"
- "A lover?"
- "Carey?"
- "Not necessarily Carcy."

Anita looked at him with a certain approval.

"Ah—so you've thought of that too? Now what exactly do you base it on?"

He shrugged and smiled.

- "Delightfullest-my thoughts are thistledown."
- "But you have your theory?" She pinned him down. "I see that you too have your theory."
 - "Our theory." He bowed.
 - "You've got wits, Jasper."
- "What are you two driving at?" Miss Howe fidgeted.
- "We're evolving a theory—a theory of Madala Grey. Who lived in the south country, Anita?"
 - "Carey, for that matter."
- "Matters not. She didn't come home for Carey. You can't make books without copy. Not her sort of book. Any more than you can make bricks without straw. But she didn't make her bricks from his straw, that I'll swear."
- "No, she didn't come home for Carey," said Anita.
 "I tell you, that was the day she met him. It's barely a year ago. She had made her name twice over by then. She was already easting about for her third plot. I think it was that that made her so restless. She'd grown very restless. But she certainly didn't come home for Carey."

- "Then why?"
- " Homesick."
- "That's absurd."
- "I'm telling you what she said. She insisted on it. She used a queer phrase. She said—'I longed for home till my lips ached.'"

The lady with Mr. Flood stirred in her shadows.

- "She didn't imagine that. That happens. That is how one longs——"She broke off.
- "For home?" he said, with that smile of his that ended at his mouth and left his eyes like chips of quartz.

She answered him slowly, him only-

"I suppose, with some women, it could be for home. If she says so—— That is what confounds one in her. She knows—she proves that she knows, in a phrase like that, things that (when one thinks of her personality) she can't know—couldn't know. It's inexplicable. 'Till one's lips ache'— Oh, Lord!" She laughed harshly.

Anita looked at them uncertainly.

"Well, that's what she said. And to judge from her description Westering was something to be homesick for. I expected a paradise."

"Westering? That's quite a town."

"Yes, I know. There's a summer colony. Madala mourned over it. She was absurd. She raced me out of the station and up the hill, and would scarcely let me look about me till we were at the top, because the lower end of the village had been built over. It might have been the sack of Rome to hear her—'Asphalt paths! Disgraeeful! The grocer used to have blue blinds. They've spoiled the village green.' And so it went on until we reached Upper Westering."

"Oh, where they live now?"

"Yes. And then she turned to me and beamed---'This is my country.' It certainly is a pretty place. There's a fine view over the downs; but too hilly for me. We elimbed up and down lanes and picked ridiculous bits of twig and green stuff till I protested. Then she took me into the churchyard. We wandered about: very pleasant it was: such a hot spring day, and pretty pinkish flowers—what did she call the stuff?—cuckoo-pint, springing from the graves—and daffodils. Then we sat down in the shadow of the church to eat our lunch. We began to discuss architecture and I was growing interested, really beginning to enjoy myself—some of it was pre-Norman—when a man climbed over the stile from the field behind the church, and came down the path towards us. As he passed, Madala looked up and he looked down, and up she jumped in a moment. 'Why,' she said, 'I do believe-I do believe-' You know that little chuckly rise in her voice when she's pleased—'I do believe it's you!' 'Oh, Madala,' I said, 'the sandwiches!!'

They were in a paper on her lap, you know. She had scattered them right and left. But I might have talked to the wind. I must say he had perfeetly respectable manners. He turned back at once, and smiled at her, and hesitated, and began to pick up the sandwiches, though he evidently didn't know her. 'Oh,' she said, 'don't you remember? Aren't you Dr. Carey? You mended my camel when I was little. I'm Madala!' She was literally brimming over with pleasure. But, you know, such a silly way to put it! If she had said 'Madala Grey' he would have known in a moment. There were a couple of Eden Walls on the bookstall as we went through. I saw them. However, he remembered her then. He certainly seemed pleased to see her, in his awkward wav. He stood looking down at her, amused and interested. People always got so interested in Madala. Haven't you noticed it? Even people in trams. Though I thought to myself at the time—' How absurd Madala is! What can they have in common?' Yes, I thought it even then."

"Well, what had they in common?"

"Heaven knew! She was ten and he was twenty-five when they last met. He knew her grand-people: he had mended her dolls for her: he lived in her old home: that, according to her, was all that mattered. She said to me afterwards, I remember, 'Just imagine seeing him! I was pleased to see him. He belongs in, you know.'

'No, Madala,' I said, 'I don't know. Such a fuss about a man you haven't seen since you were a child! I call it affectation. It's a slight on your real friends.' 'Oh,' she said, 'but he belongs in.' She looked quite chastened. She said—'Nita, it wasn't affectation. I believe he was pleased too—honestly!' He was. Who wouldn't be? You know the effect she used to make."

"What did he say?" asked the Baxter girl.

"Oh, he looked down at her as if he were shy. Then he said—'You've a long memory, Madala!' Yes, he called her Madala from the first. It annoyed me. She said—'Oh, do you remember when Mother was so ill once? You were very kind to me then.' Then she said something which amazed me. I'd known her for two years before she told me anything about that Sylvania tragedy, but to him she spoke at once. 'They're dead,' she said, 'Mother and Father. They're drowned. There isn't anyone.' But her voice! It made me quite nervous. I thought she was going to break down. He said, with a stiff sort of effort—'Yes. I heard.' That was all. Nothing sympathetic. He just stood and looked at her."

"Well?" said Miss Howe impatiently.

"Oh—nothing else. I finished picking up the sandwiches. She introduced me, but I don't think he realized who I was. It annoyed me very much that she insisted on his eating lunch with us. As I said to her afterwards, it wasn't suitable. Buns in a bag! But there he sat on a damp stone, (he gave Madala his overcoat to sit upon) perfectly contented. I confess I wasn't cordial. But he noticed nothing. Obtuse! That was how I summed him up from the first—obtuse! And no conversation whatever. Madala did the talking. I believe she asked after every cat and dog for twenty miles round. And her lack of reticence to a comparative stranger was amazing. She told him more about herself in half an hour than she had told me in four years. But she was an unaccountable creature.

"Yes, that's just it. One never knew what Madala would do next, and yet when she'd done it, one said—'Of course! Just what Madala would do!' But it wasn't like her to neglect you, Nita!"

"Oh, she noticed after a time. She began to be uncomfortable. I—withdrew myself, as it were. You know my way. She didn't like that. She tried—I will say that for her—she did try to direct the conversation towards my subjects. Useless, of course. He was, not illiterate—no, you can't say illiterate—but curiously unintellectual. Socialism now—somehow we got on to socialism. That roused him. I must say, though he expressed himself clumsily, that he had ideas. But so limited. He had never heard of Marx. Bernard Shaw was barely a name to him. Socialism—his socialism—when we disentangled it, was only another word for the proper feeding of the local infants—drains—measles—the village schools. Beyond that he was mute. But Madala chimed in with details of American slum life, and roused him at once. They grew quite eloquent. But not one word, if you please, of her own work. Anything and everything but her work. He did ask her what she was doing. 'Oh,' said she in an offhand way, 'I scribble. Stories.' And then—'It earns money, and it kills time.' Yes, that's exactly how she put it. 'Madala!' I said, 'that's not the spirit-' I'd never heard her use such a tone before. She had such high ideals of art. It jarred me. I thought that she ought to have known better. But she looked at me in such a curious way-defiant almost. She said—'It's my own spirit, Nita. Oh, let me have a holiday!' And at that up she jumped and left us sitting there, and wandered off to the stile and was over it in a second. We sat still. The hedge hid her. Then we heard her call—'Cowslips! Oh, cowslips!' I thought he would go when she called, but he sat where he was, listening. It was one of those hot, still days, you know. There was a sort of spell on things. There were bees about. We heard a cart roll up the road. I wanted to get up and talk, make some kind of diversion, and yet I couldn't. We heard her call again—'Hundreds of cowslips! I'm going to make a cowslip ball.' Her voice sounded far away, but very clear. And there was a scent of may in the air, and dust—an intoxicating smell.

It made me quite sleepy. It was just as if time stood still. Three o'clock's a drowsy time, I suppose. And he never stirred—just sat there stupidly. But I was too sleepy to be bored with him. Presently back she eame. She had picked up her skirt and her petticoat showed—it was that lavender silk you gave her, Lila. So unsuitable, you know, on those dirty roads. And her skirt was full of cowslips. She was just a dark figure against the sky until she was close to us; but then, I thought that she looked pretty, extremely pretty. Bright cheeks, you know, and her eyes so blue——"

"Grey—" said Mr. Flood, "the grey eyes of a goddess."

"They looked blue, and she didn't look like a goddess. She looked like a little girl. Well, there she stood, with her grey skirt and her lavender silk, and her cowslips—you know they have a sweet smell, cowslips, a very sweet smell—and tumbled them all down on the tombstone. Then she wanted string. Carey seemed to wake up at that. He'd been looking at her as if he had dreamed her. He produced string. He was that sort of man. Then she made her cowslip ball. I held one end of the string and he held the other, and she nipped the stalks off the flowers and strung them athwart it. That is the way to make a cowslip ball."

"Nita, I love you!" eried Miss Howe for the second time, and the others laughed.

She stopped. She stiffened.

"I don't know what you mean."

"Ne' mind! Go on!"

She said offendedly-

"There's nothing more to tell. We got up and came away."

But as we sat silently by, still waiting, the story-teller crept back into her face.

"Oh, yes-" up went her forefinger. "It was then that it happened. We went stumbling over the graves, round to the east end, to see the lepers' window, a particularly interesting one. Ruskin mentions it. Yes, Carey came with us. There's a little bit of bare lawn under the window before the stones begin again, and as we crossed it Madala gave a kind of shuddering start. He said-'Cold?' smiling at her. She shivered again, in spite of herself as it were, for she'd been joking and laughing, and said—'Someone must be walking over my grave.' And at that he gave her such a look, and said loudly in a great rough voice—'Rubbish! don't talk such rubbish!' Really, you know, the tone! And I thought to myself then as I've thought many times since—'At heart the man's a bully—that's what the man is.' But Madala laughed. We didn't stay long after that. The window was a disappointment—restored. There was nothing further to see and Madala was quite right-it was chilly. The sky had clouded over and there was a wind. I thought it time to go. Madala made no objection. She had grown curiously quiet. She tired easily, you know. And he didn't say another word. Quite time to go. I thought we might try for the earlier train, so we went off at last in a hurry. No, he didn't come with us: we shook hands at the gate. And when I looked back a minute later he had turned away. We caught our train."

There was a little pause that Miss Howe ended.

"Queer!" she said.

Anita stared at them. Her hands twitched.

"Oh, I'm a practical person, but—'You're walking on my grave,' she said. And there or thereabouts, I suppose, she'll lie."

"Coincidence," said Mr. Flood quickly.

"Of course. I never thought of it again. Nor did Madala for that matter, though she was quiet enough in the train. There she sat, looking out of the window and smiling to herself. But then she was always like that after any little excitement, very quiet for an hour, re-living it—literally. I think, you know," she hesitated, "that that was the secret of her genius. Her genius was her memory. She liked whate'er she looked on—."

"And her looks were certainly everywhere," said the blonde lady in her drawling voice.

"Just so. But it didn't end there. She remembered. She remembered uncannily. She was like a child picking up pebbles from the beach every holiday, and spending all the rest of its year polishing. She turned them into jewels. The process used to fascinate me—professionally, you know. You could see her mind at work on some trifling incident, fidgeting with it, twisting it, dropping it, picking it up again, till one wearied. And then a year later, or two years, or three years, or ten years maybe, you'll pick up a novel or a story, and there you'll find it, cut, graved, polished, set in diamonds, but—the same pebble, if one has the wit to see."

"Well, what did she say?" Miss Howe cut through the theory impatiently.

Anita frowned. She disliked being hurried.

"Oh, that day? very little. I was surprised. She usually enjoyed pouring herself out to me. But no, she just sat and smiled. It irritated me. 'What is it, Madala?' I said at last. She stared at me as if she had never seen me before. 'I don't know,' she said in her vague way. And then—'Wasn't it a lovely day?' I waited. I knew she would go on sooner or later. Presently she said—'That stone we sat on was damp. He was quite right.' Then she said, thinking aloud as it were—'You know, if a man has a really pleasant voice, I like it better than women's voices. It's so steady.' And then—'What did you think of him, Anita?'"

Miss Howe chuckled.

"And you said?"

"Oh, I said what I could. I didn't want to hurt her feelings. It was so obvious that the place and everyone in it was beglamoured for her. I said that he seemed a worthy, harmless person, or something to that effect. I forget exactly how I phrased it-I was tactful, of course. Oh, I remember, I said that she ought to put him into a book-that the old country doctors were disappearing, like the farmers and the parsons. I'm sure I appeared interested. But all she said was-'Old? He's not old. Would you call him old?' 'That was a figure of speech,' I said. 'I was thinking of the type. But all the same you can't describe him as young, Madala.' 'Oh, he's not a boy,' she said. 'No-one ever said he was a boy.' She didn't say any more. But just as we were getting out at Victoria she cried-' My cowslips! Anita, my cowslips! I've forgotten my cowslip ball.' I told her that it wouldn't have lasted anyway, with the stalks nipped off so short. But she looked as if she had lost a kingdom."

"I believe I know that cowslip ball." Miss Howe looked amused. "A cowslip ball, anyway. She had one sent to her once when I was there. I thought it was from her slum children."

"Yes, he sent it on." My cousin went on quickly with her own story. "How he knew the address puzzled me. Her publishers wouldn't have given it and I know she didn't."

"Telephone book," said the Baxter girl, as one experienced.

"Ah, possibly. I went round to her that morning, and—yes, you were there, Lila," she conceded, "for I remember I wondered how Madala could compose herself to work with anyone else in the room. I always left her to herself when she stayed with me."

"She didn't mind me," said Miss Howe firmly.

"She always said that she didn't, I know. And of course I know that it is possible to withdraw oneself as it were, but I confess I disapproved. Her room was a regular clearing-house in those days. Oh, not you particularly, Lila, but——"

"You came in yourself that morning, didn't you?" said Miss Howe very softly and sweetly.

- "I was telling you so. And what did I find? Her desk littered over with string and paper and moss and damp cardboard, and that story Hooper published (it had been freshly typed only the day before) watering into purple under my eyes, while she sat and gloated over those wretched flowers. 'Madala!' I said, 'your manuscript! Really, Madala!'"
- "And Madala—" Miss Howe began to laugh—
 "Oh, I remember now,"
- "What did Madala say?" demanded the Baxter girl.
- "It wasn't like her." Anita fidgeted. "She knew how I disliked the modern manner."
 - "But she said," Miss Howe caught it up-
- "I don't know what possessed her," said my cousin with a rush. "She actually stamped her foot at me. Yes, she did, and then held out her wretched posy and said—'Oh, damn the manuscript, Nita! Smell!'"

"What did Nita do?" enquired the blonde lady softly of Miss Howe.

"Sniffed," Mr. Flood struck in. "Obviously! Satisfied Madala and relieved her own feelings. That is called tact."

"And just then, you know," Miss Howe glanced over her shoulder and lowered her voice, "he came in."

"Kent?" The lady with Mr. Flood did not lower her voice. I believe she wanted him to hear. She was like a curious child poking at a hurt beastie. Her smile was infantine as she looked across at him. But the man at the window never stirred.

"Sh!" Miss Howe frowned at her. And then, still whispering—"Yes, don't you remember? he had his studio in the same block all that year. He always came across to Madala when he wanted a sardine tin opened, or change for his gas, or someone to sit to him."

"Someone was saying that he couldn't keep a model." Mr. Flood glanced at them in turn.

Miss Howe flushed surprisingly.

"It's not that. You ought to know better, Jasper. It's only that he's exigeant—never knows how the time goes, and—" she lowered her voice still more, "and Madala spoilt him. She could sit by the hour looking like a Madonna, and getting all her own head-work done, and never stirring a hair. Of course he doesn't like the shilling an hour type after her."

"I know, I know! The explanation is quite unnecessary." He smiled and waved his hand.

"Then why---?" She was still flushed and annoyed.

"One gets at other people's views. I merely wondered how the—er—partnership appeared to your—er—intelligence. Now I know."

"She did spoil him." Anita disregarded them. "The time she wasted on him! In he came, you know, that day, and she went to meet him with the cowslips still in her hand, and shielding her eyes from the sun. That room of hers got all the morning sun."

"What did she wear—the blue dress?" The Baxter girl was like a child being told a story.

"I forget. Anyway he stood looking her up and down till she reddened and began to laugh at him. And then he said—'And cowslips too! What luek! Come along! Come along!' 'Oh, my good man!' I said, 'she's in the middle of her writing!' But it was useless to expostulate. He wanted her and so she went. I heard him as he dragged her off. 'Madala, I've got such a notion!' No, it was the great fault of her character, I consider, that she could never deny anyone, not even for her work's sake. Still, I suppose one had to forgive it in that ease, for that was the beginning, you know, of The Spring Song. She is painted just as she stood there that morning, literally gilded over with sunshine, and the flowers in her hands."

"It's the best thing he's ever done, isn't it?" said the Baxter girl.

"Best thing? It's a master-piece. It's Madala Grey."

"When is he going to show it?" said Mr. Flood. Anita shrugged.

- "Heaven knows! He insists that it isn't finished. I believe he sits and prays over it. He was annoyed that Madala took me there one day. You know how touchy he is."
 - "He won't show it now," said the blonde lady.
- "Why not? Why not?" Anita hovered, on the pounce, like a cat over a bowl of goldfish, and like a fish the blonde lady glided out of reach.
 - "And she asks!" she appealed to the others.

Anita frowned.

"You're cryptic."

"Well, wasn't there a certain—rivalry? You should have a fellow-feeling."

"Oh—" she resented quickly, "Kent always wanted to keep her to himself, if you mean that."

The blonde lady smiled.

"And now he keeps her to himself. I mean just that. I go by your account, of course. I haven't glimpsed The Spring Song."

"So that started it." The Baxter girl mused aloud. "I think that's romantic now—to make a famous picture and to pick up one's husband, all in twenty-four hours."

" 'Pick up!""

- "You know what I mean-fall in love."
- " 'Fall in love!"
- "Nita, don't trample." Miss Howe threw the Baxter girl a cigarette.
- "I only mean—it was romantic, meeting like that so long ago and nobody knowing a word until just before they were married, except you, Miss Serle. And I don't believe you guessed?" She questioned her with defiant eyebrows.

"How could I guess what never happened? 'In love!' I suppose it deceived some good folks."

- "It wasn't so long ago," Miss Howe soothered them. She had a funny little way of slipping people into another subject if she thought that they sounded quarrelsome. 'Let's be comfortable!' was written all over her. And yet she could scratch. I think that a great many women are like Miss Howe.
- "Long ago? Of course not!" Anita picked it up at once. "How long is it? A year? Eighteen months? April, wasn't it? She wrote The Resting-place in the next three months. Seamped. I shall always say so. She was three years over Ploughed Fields. Yes, April began it. The Resting-place was out for the Christmas sales. She married him at Easter. And now it's November. The year's not gone. But Madala Grey is gone."
 - "Where?" said the Baxter girl intensely.
 - "Don't!" said Miss Howe.

But the Baxter girl looked as if she couldn't stop herself.

- "We—we put her into the past tense—d'you notice how easily we're doing it already?—but—is she less alive to you, less lovable, less Madala Grey to you, because of a telegram and a funeral service? is she?"
- "No," said Miss Howe. "If you put it like that—no."
- "Yes," said Mr. Flood. "When you put it like that—yes."
- "She must be somewhere," argued the Baxter girl. "She can't just stop."
- "Why not?" said Mr. Flood, with his bored smile.
- "She ean't. I feel it," she said with her hand at her heart and her large eyes on him.
- "I don't," he said to her, and he lost his smile.
 "Dust to dust——"

The woman behind him moved restlessly.

"Jasper, dear! How trite!"

"But the spirit?" said the Baxter girl, "the spirit?"

Nobody answered. The little blue flames on the hearth capered and said 'Chik-chik!' Anita shivered.

"The room's getting cold," she said sharply. And then—"Jenny, is that door open? There's such a draught."

I got up and went to see. But the door was shut. When I came back they were talking again. Anita was answering the Baxter girl.

"Yes, I stayed there once. A pretty place. The sort of place she would choose. All roses. No conveniences. And what with the surgery and the socialism, the poor seemed to be always with us. Only one servant—"

"She ought to have made money," said Miss Howe.

"Oh, the first two books were a succès d'estime, I wept over her contract. She did make a considerable amount of money on The Resting-place. But it was all put by for the child. She told me so. He, you know, a poor man's doctor! She told me that too—flung it at me. She had an extravagant way of talking, manner more than anything, of course, but to hear her you would almost think she was proud of the life they led. She was always unpractical."

"I'd like to have gone down there once," said Miss Howe. "If I'd known—heigh-ho!"

"I—I wished I hadn't gone," said Anita slowly. "It wasn't a success."

"The husband, I suppose," the Baxter girl hinted delicately.

"No, I hardly saw him. It was Madala herself. Changed. Affectionate—she was always that to me but——I remember sitting with her once. We had been talking, about Aphra Behn I believe, and she had grown flushed and had begun to stammer a little. You know her way?"

"I know." The Baxter girl leaned forward eagerly.

"And she was tracing a parallel between the development of the novel and the growth of the woman's movement-her old vein. Brilliant, she was. And all at once she stopped and began staring in front of her. You know that trick she had of frowning out her thoughts. I was eareful not to interrupt. I knew something big was coming. She could be—prophetic, sometimes. At last she said in a worried sort of way-' I've a dreadful feeling that we're out of coffee and it's early closing.' No, I'm not exaggerating—her very words. And then some long rigmarole about Carey's appetite, and that if she made the coffee black strong she could persuade him to take more milk with it. Oh—pitiful! And in a moment she'd dashed off on a three-mile walk to the next village where there was a grocer that did open on Wednesdays. Oh, it was most pathetic. It made me realize the effect that he was having on her-stultifying! I always did dislike him."

"Well, I don't know," said Miss Howe.

"Just so—you don't know. Naturally, you were not so intimate with Madala. Well, that very afternoon, I remember, he came in at tea-time. That was unusual: he was generally late for seven-thirty dinner, and then he didn't ehange. I used to wonder how Madala allowed it. Well, as I was telling you, he came in, stamping through the hall, calling to her, and when he opened the drawing-room door and found that she was out, you should have seen his look! Sour! No other word! And off he went at once to meet her, on his bievele, though I was prepared to give him tea. They didn't come back for hours. In fact I had gone up to change. I saw them from the window, coming up the drive. And there was Madala Grey, perelled on his bievele. with a great bunch of that white parsley that grows in the hedges, and a string bag dangling down, while he steadied her, and both of them talking! and as he helped her off, she kissed him-in front of the kitchen windows. And, if you please, not a word of apology to me. All she said was-why hadn't I seen that he had some tea before he went after her? I think it's the only time I've ever seen Madala annoved. No, you can't say the marriage improved her." She paused. "It was so unlike her," she meditated, "as if I could help it! You know, I'd always thought her so considerate. Carey's influence, of course. Oh," she cried out suddenly and angrily, "I've got nothing against Carey. I'm not prejudiced. But if he'd been the sort of man one could approve—someone—" Her eve wandered from Kent Rehan to Mr. Flood-"but he was dragging her down-"

Miss Howe shook her head.

"Anita, you're wrong. I've only met him a couple of times but I liked what I saw of him. An honest, straightforward sort of person. Oh, not clever, of course. He'd have bored me in a week——"

- "Ah?" said the woman behind Mr. Flood.
- "Oh yes, dull—distinctly. But I had the impression that if I'd been one of his patients I should have done everything he told me to do."

Anita shrugged.

- "Oh, I've no doubt he had every virtue, but it's idle to pretend that he made any attempt to appreciate Madala Grey."
- "You don't suggest that the man didn't love his wife, do you?" said Miss Howeinher downright way.
- "I suggest nothing. But the fact remains—I give it for what it is worth—but the fact does remain that John Carey has never read one of her books—not one!"
- "What?" The Baxter girl's mouth opened and stayed so.
 - "You don't intend to say-" began Mr. Flood.
- "I don't believe it," said Miss Howe contemptuously.
- "Why not? I've known a man jealous of his wife before now. I suppose he knew enough to know that she had the brains." The blonde lady was smiling.

Anita shook her head reluctantly.

- "Jealousy? Hm—it might have been, of course. But I didn't get that impression. I believe that it was a perfectly genuine lack of interest."
- "Yes, but I don't believe it. How d'you know he didn't? It's not a thing he'd own to. Who told you?"

"Madala. Madala herself. She used to make a joke of it."

"She never showed when she was hurt," said the Baxter girl emotionally.

"Yes, but it almost seemed as if she were not hurt, as if her—her sensitiveness, her better feelings, had been blunted. I've known her use it as a weapon almost," said Anita conscientiously recollecting. "He—that annoyed me so—he was very peremptory with her sometimes, most rude in his manner. Of course, you know, she was dreamy. Not that that excused him for a moment. I remember a regular seene—"

"Before you?" Miss Howe east instant doubt upon it.

"My room was next to theirs. I could hear them through the wall. I can assure you that he stormed at her in a most ungentlemanly way—"

"What about?" said the Baxter girl breathlessly.

"Something about his razors. A pareel had come by the early post, and just because she had eut the string—but I couldn't follow it all. He was a man who was easily irritated by trifles. Well, as I say, after he had raged at her for five minutes or more, till I could have gone in and spoken to him myself, all that that patient woman said, was—'Darling, have you begun Eden Walls yet?' I tell you the man never said another word."

"He didn't prevent her writing, did he?" said Miss Howe.

"There's no doubt that he discouraged her. He was selfish. It was his wretched doctoring all day long—and you know how sensitive Madala was. I did persuade her to do some work while I was staying with them, but I soon saw that it was labour thrown away. Her heart wasn't in it. When it wasn't Carey it was the baby clothes. For the sake of her reputation," her voice hardened, "it's as well that she has died when she has."

"Anita!"

"I mean it." She was quick and fierce. "Do you think it was a little thing for me to see that pearl of great price—oh, not Madala Grey! I grew to hate her almost, that new Madala Grey—but the gift within her, her great, blazing genius—flung away, trampled on——"

Miss Howe turned her head in slow denial.

"No, Anita! Not genius. Charm, if you like. Talent, as much as you please. But Madala Grey wasn't a genius, and she knew it."

Anita flung up her head.

"She will be when I've done with her. She will be when I've written the Life."

"Ah, the poor child!" said Great-aunt start-lingly.

Anita never heeded. She was wrapt away in some cold passion of her own, a passion that amazed me. I had always thought of her as what she looked, an ordered, steely woman, all brain and will; yet now of a sudden she revealed herself, a creature convulsed, writhing in flames. But they were cold flames. Cold fire, is there such a thing? Ice burns. There is phosphorus. There is the light of stars. I know what I mean if only I had the words. Star-fire—that's it. She was like a dead star. She warmed no-one, she only burned herself up.

It was the impression of a moment. When I looked again it was as if I had been withdrawn from a telescope. She was herself once more. The volcano had shrunk to a diamond twinkle, to a tiny, gesticulating creature with a needle tongue. It was bewildering: while I listened to her I was still thinking—'Yes, but which is Anita? Diamond or star? What makes the glitter? Frost or flame?'

But that blonde woman in the shadows went off into noiseless laughter that woke the dragons and stirred Mr. Flood to an upward glance. Then he hunched himself closer against her knees, his chin low on his chest, so that his tiny beard and mouth and eyes were like triangles standing on their points. The pose gave him a glinting air of mockery and yet, somehow, you did not feel that he was amused. You only felt—'Oh, he's practised that at a looking-glass.'

He drawled out—

"The Life, dear lady? Enlighten our darkness."

"That," came the murmur behind him, "is precisely what she is going to do. How dense you are, Jasper!"

And at the same moment from Miss Howe-

"Be quiet, you two! Tell us, Anita! A life of her? Is that it? Ah, well, I always suspected your note-book. Did she know you Boswellized?"

"She?" There was the strangest mixture of seorn and admiration in the voice. "As if one could let her know! That was the difficulty with Madala Grey: she wouldn't take herself seriously. She had—"a pause and a search for the correct word—"what I can only call a perverted sense of humour. If she'd known that I—noted things, she'd have been quite capable of falsifying all her opinions, misrepresenting herself completely, just to—throw me out, as it were. Not maliciously, I don't mean that. But she teases," finished Anita petulantly. "She will do it. She laughs at the wrong things. Of course she's young still."

"Yes, she's young—now. She stays young now. She gains that at least," said the woman in the shadows.

Anita made a quick little sound, half titter and half gasp.

"Oh!" she cried—and her voice was as grey as her face—"I forgot. Do you know—I forgot! It's going to be ghastly. I believe I shall always be forgetting."

I glaneed up at Kent Rehan. It made me realize that I had been listening with anxiety, that I was afraid of their expressive sentences. They had words, those writing people. They knew what they thought: they could say what they thought: and what they thought could hurt. I didn't want him to be hurt. I said, under my breath—

"Oh, why do you stay here? They aren't your sort."

But he had heard nothing. He was poring over the long tassel of the blind, weaving it into a sixstrand plait. I couldn't help watching his fingers. He had the most beautiful hands that I've ever seen on a man. They looked like two alive and independent creatures. They looked as if they could do anything they chose, whether he were there to superintend or not. And he was miles away. I was glad. Anita's voice was rising like a dreary wind.

"Just that is so strange. All the time I've known her I've thought of her in the past tense. Her moods, her ways, her actions, were finished things to me—chapters of the Life. I wrote her all the time. But now, when she is mine, as it were, now that she exists only in my notes and papers and remembrance of her, now it comes that I'm shaken. I can't think of her as a subject any more. I shall be wanting her—herself. I can't think clearly. It's frightening me, the work there is ahead of me. Because I've got to do it without her. She's lying dead down there in Surrey—now—at this minute. And there's that man—and a child. One's overwhelmed. It's so cruel. The only creature who ever cared for me. Think of Madala, quite still, not answering, not lighting up when you speak to her, staring at the ceiling, staring at her own coffinlid. In two days she'll be under the ground. Do you ever think what that means—burial—the corruption—the——''

"Stop it, Nita!" Miss Howe's movement blotted out my cousin's face. "Do you hear? I can't stand it. Here—drink some coffee. Jasper! Say something!" I heard the coffee-cup dance in its saucer.

There came Aunt Serle's anxious quaver-

"Anita! Nita! What's the matter, my dear? What's the matter with my daughter?"

Nobody answered. She was like a tortoise as she poked her head from the hood of her chair.

"Jenny!" she called cautiously. "Jenny!" I slipped across the room to her.

"What's it about, Jenny? Eh? Speak up, my dear! Not crying, is she? Temper, that's it. Don't say I said so."

"It's all right, Auntie. She—they—it's the bad news. It's upset them all."

"Bad news? Fiddlesticks! Temper, I call it. Why shouldn't the girl get married? Not much money, but a pleasant fellow. Time for her to settle. I said to her—'My dear, you follow your heart.' But Nita tried to stop it. Nita couldn't get over it. Cricd. Temper. That's it. Look at her now. 'Sh! Don't let her see you."

But Anita wasn't looking at me and she wasn't erying. I suppose Great-aunt must have known what she was talking about; but it wasn't easy to imagine my cousin soft and red-eyed like that great, good-natured Miss Howe. Her little sharp face looked as controlled as if it were carved. Yet, as she said herself, she was shaken. That showed in the jerkiness of her movements, the sharpening of her voice, in the break-up of her accustomed flow of words into staceato, like a river that has come to some rocks: and her hands had a clock-work, incessant movement, clutch-clutch, fingers on palm, that her eyes repeated. They were everywhere at once, resting, flitting, settling again, yet seeing nothing, I think, while she listened to Mr. Flood and grew more irritated with every word.

"Why bad news?" said Great-aunt in my ear.
"It's a son, isn't it?"

I hesitated.

"Oh, Auntie, didn't you hear?" (She had heard, you know. I had seen her shrinking back when Anita screamed at her, with that dreadful shrinking that you see in an animal threatened by a headblow. She had been leaning forward, and eager. She must have heard.)

"Hear? They all talk," she quavered. "Be quiet,' says Anita. Ah, I've spoilt her. Now Madala— What's the time, my dear? Why don't she come?"

"Auntie-Auntie-"

"Eh?" she said. "Why don't Madala come?"

- "Auntie-you've forgotten. She's been ill."
- "Ah—and she'll be worse before she's better," said Great-aunt briskly. "'Sh! Listen to my daughter."

We listened: at least, I listened. Great-aunt cocked her head on one side, still as a bird, for a minute; then, like a bird, she was re-assured and fell to her knitting again.

Anita and Mr. Flood were quarrelling.

"Why shouldn't I? Tell me that! Is anyone better fitted? Who knows as much about her as I do? Didn't I discover her, hacking on two pounds a week? Didn't I recognize what she was? Who sent her to Mitchell and Bent? Who introduced her everywhere? Who bullied her into writing Ploughed Fields? Who was the best friend she ever had—even if I didn't make the parade of being fond of her that—— Oh, I've no patience! What would the world know of Madala Grey if it weren't for me?"

"But—oh, of course we all know how good you were to her, Miss Serle, indeed I can guess by what you've done for me——" began the Baxter girl.

Mr. Flood's tongue tip showed between his red lips. I think he would have made some comment but for the hand pressing on his shoulder.

- "But---?" said the woman behind the hand.
- "I only mean—' genius will out,' won't it?"
- "Genius? Big word!" said Miss Howe.

"Not too big." The Baxter girl reddened enthusiastically.

"'Genius will out?' Not Madala Grey's. She didn't know she had any. I don't believe she ever fully realized— Why, it was the merest chance that Eden Walls didn't go into the fire. If it hadn't been for me—if it hadn't been for me—"

"Ah—you!" Miss Howe squared up to her. "Now just what (among friends) have you stood to gain? Fond of her? Oh yes, you were, Anita! Don't tell me! But in spite of yourself, eh? But that wasn't what you were after. You didn't get the pleasure out of her that—I did, for instance. You used to exhaust Madala. I've seen you do it. You—you drained her."

"Yes, I did. I meant to," said Anita with her laugh. "Pleasure!"

"And she thought you were fond of her. She used to flare if anyone attacked you. Poor Madala!"

"Poor? Why? I shall give it all back." Anita gave her a long cool look. "I—I hate debts," said Anita.

Miss Howe flushed brightly.

"If you were cursed with the artistic temperament——" She broke off and began again. "If I were a poor devil of a Bohemian in a hole, it's not to you I'd go——"

"-twice!" said Anita.

Again they eyed each other. Miss Howe, still flushing, chose her words.

"Madala never lent. That wasn't in her. She gave. Time, money, love—she gave. You took, it was understood, rather than hurt her feelings by refusing. But it was always free gift."

"Not to me." Anita held her head high. "I shall pay. And interest too."

"Oh, the Life! Are you really going to attempt a Life?" Miss Howe recovered herself with a laugh, while Mr. Flood repeated curiously—

"Yes, but then what were you after, Anita?

What do you stand to gain?"

"Reflected glory," came from behind him.

She turned as if she had been stung.

"Reflected? Let her keep it! Reflected? Am I never to have anything of my own? Oh, wait!"

"You can't get much of yourself into a life of Madala Grey though. You've too much sense of style for that," Mr. Flood insisted. "We both hate a biographer who 'I says, says I."

"Oh, it shall be all Madala Grey. I promise you that," she said with her thin smile.

"Humph! It's a notion." Miss Howe was really interested, I could see—yet with a flush on her cheek still. "It's your sort of work too, Anita!

You're—happier—in critical work."

"Oh, don't hedge. Don't be delicate with me. I can't create, that's what you mean. Do you think that's news to me? Is there a critic who has failed to make it clear to me? I can record—but I can't create. Good! I can't create. I can't do what she did—what you do, Jasper—what even Beryl here does. But——" she paused an instant, "you should be afraid of me for all that. I can pry. Little, nasty, mean word, isn't it? It's me!"

The Baxter girl laughed uncertainly and then stopped because Anita's eyes were on her.

"I've eyes. I—" she opened and shut her tiny hands before them-"I've claws. I can pry you open, any of you-if I choose. I haven't chosen. You've not been worth while. But-Madala!" and here she released the uneasy Baxter girl-"Madala's my chance-my chance-my chance! Madala Grev-look at her-coming into her kingdom at twenty-that babe! And me! Look at me! Do you know what my life has been, any of you? Oh, you come to my house to meet my lionets, and we're very good friends, and you're afraid of my reviews, and so I have my position, I suppose. But what do you know about me? When I was fifteen—and it's thirty years ago—I said to myself, 'Now what shall I do with my life?' Mother—" she shot her a glance: she didn't even trouble to lower her voice, "she'd have drudged me and dressed me and married me, I suppose, to three hundred a year and the city—oh, with the best of motives. I fought. I fought. That's why I'm an ungrateful daughter. I'm supposed to be, I think. My people were so sorry for my mother. My people thought me a fool. I saw through them. Yes, and I saw through myself. That's the kind of fool I was. Didn't I reckon it out? I hadn't a charm. I hadn't a talent. I had my will. That's all I had. I taught myself. Work? You don't know what work means, you ten and five-talented. There's not a book worth reading that I haven't read. There's not the style of a master that I haven't studied, that I couldn't reproduce at a pinch. There's not a man or a woman in London today, worth knowing—from my point of view that I haven't contrived to know. The people who've arrived—how I've studied them, the ways of them, the methods of them. And what's the end of it all? That-" she jerked her head to the row of her own books on the shelf behind her, "and my column in the Matins, and some comforting hundreds a year, and-my knowledge of myself. Oh, I've turned out good work. I know that. I have judgment. That's why I judge myself. I've always been rigid with myself. And so I know when I look at my books-though I can say that they are sounder, better work, in better English, that they have more knowledge behind them, than the books of a dozen of you people who arriveyet I know that they have failed. People don't read me. People don't want me. Why? I have my name. I've the name of a well-known critic, but—I'm only a name. I'm not alive. The public doesn't touch hands with me. Now why? Oh, how I've tormented myself. Nearly thirty years

I've given, of unremitting labour, to my art, to my career. There's not a thought or a wish that I haven't sacrificed to it. And then that child of twenty comes along, without knowledge, without training, without experience, and gets at one leap, mark you all, at one leap, more than I've achieved in thirty years. Some people, I suppose, would submit. Well, I won't. I wouldn't. Does my will go for nothing? I will have my share. 'Reflected glory,' yes, I've stooped to that. I've exploited her, if you like to call it that. When I think of the day I discovered her-" She paused an instant, dragging her hand wearily over her eyes-"I was at my zero that day. The Famous Women had been out a week. The reviews -oh, the reviews! Respectful, courteous, lukewarm. If they'd attacked me, if they'd slated, I'd have rejoiced. But they respect me and they're bored. They know it's sound work and they're bored. I bore people. I bore you-all of you. Do you think I'm blind? That night I read the manuscript of Eden Walls. (Wasn't it kind of me -it wasn't even typed!) And then I saw my chance. I saw how far she'd got at twenty, and I thought-'I'll take my chance. I'll take this genius. I'll make her fond of me. I'll help her. I'll worm myself into her. I'll abase myself. I'll toadv. I'll do anything. But I will find out how she does it. I will find out the secret. I'll find it and I'll make it my own. I'll serve for her as Jacob served for Rachel; but she shall serve me in the end.' I have watched. I have studied. I have puzzled. I believe I've grasped it at last. I know myself and I know her. If genius is life—the power to give life-is it that? then I'm barren. I can't make life as Madala can. But-listen to me! Listen to me all of you! I can take a living thing -I can cut it open alive. That's what I shall do with this life-maker—this casy genius. I've taken her to pieces, flesh and blood, bone and ligament and muscle, every secret of her mind and her heart and her soul. The life, the real life of Madala Grey, the rise and fall of a genius, that's what I'm going to make plain. She's been a puzzle to you all, with her gifts and her ways and her crazy marriage -she's not a mystery to me. I tell you I've got her, naked, pinned down, and now I shall make her again. Isn't it fair? She ought to thank me. 'Dead,' he says. Who's to blame? She chose to kill herself. What right had she to take risks? I-I've refrained. She couldn't. She threw away her lamp. But I-I take it. I light it again. Finding's keeping. It's mine."

Her voice ripped on the high note like a rag on a nail, and she checked, panting. Her hand went up to her throat as the fumy air rasped it.

"Mine!" she cried again, coughing. There was wild-fire in her eyes as she challenged them.

The little space between her solitariness and their grouped attention was filled with fog and silence and lamp-light, woven as it were into a fifth element. It was like a pool to be crossed. And across it, in answer, a laugh rippled out.

I don't know who it was that laughed. I did not recognize the voice. Sometimes, looking back, I think it was the laugh of their collective soul.

"Oh!" cried Anita, and stopped as if she had been awakened suddenly by a blow—as if the little wondering, wincing cry had been struck out of her by a blow on the face. She stood thus a moment, uncertain. Then she too laughed, nervously, apologetically.

"One talks," she said, "among friends."

Miss Howe made a wry face.

"Lord, we're a queer set of friends! How we love one another!"

"You've all of you been awfully good to me," said the Baxter girl. But her gratitude was too general to be acceptable. Even I could have told her that.

"Oh, we do our best for you," said Mr. Flood. She looked at him from under her lashes.

"Yes, and she's thinking this minute what a nice little scene this would make for her new book—touched up, of course," said the woman behind him.

"Art — selection — Jimmy Whistler——" Mr. Flood was one indistinct murmur.

"With herself her own heroine again, eh?" Miss Howe baited her.

- "I didn't. I wasn't."
- "Better folk than you do it, child! Anita says so. Don't they, Anita?"
- "Oh," said Anita heavily, "I wish Madala Grey were here. I wish she hadn't died. If she were here she wouldn't—you'd never—she wouldn't let you laugh at me."

Miss Howe looked at her intently. There was a quick little run of expression across her large handsome face, like a hand playing a scale. It showed, that easily moved, easily read face, surprise, interest, concern, and, in the end, the sentimental impulse of your kind fur-clad woman to the beggar on the curb. 'Why! I believe she's cold! I don't like it! Give her tuppence, quick!' She was out of her chair, overwhelming Anita, in one impetuous heave of drapery.

"You're right, Nita! We're pigs! Something's wrong with us. 'Pologize. You know we don't mean it."

Anita endured her right-and-left kisses.

"You do mean it," was all she said.

She was shrunk to such a small grey creature again. I thought to myself—'Fire? It's not even diamond-sparkle. She's as dull as stone.'

Miss Howe was eagerly remorseful.

"We don't. I don't know what's got into us tonight. It's the fog. There's something evil about a fog. Distorting. It yellows over one's soul."

"It isn't only tonight," said the Baxter girl, with her sidelong, 'can-I-risk-it?' look at them. "The fog's been coming on for months."

"And you mean——?" The blonde lady never snubbed the Baxter girl. It struck me suddenly, as their eyes met, that there was the beginning of a likeness between them. The Baxter girl at fifty—with dyed hair——? But it was only an idea of mine. I'm always seeing imaginary likenesses. I remember that those Academy pictures of Kent Rehan's always set me to work wondering—'That woman with the face turned away—I've seen her somewhere—of whom does she remind me?—where have I seen her?' And yet, of course, in those days I knew nothing of Madala Grey.

But the Baxter girl was answering-

"It—it's cheek, I know, but it's true. When I first came—" then, with a swift propitiatory glance at Anita—" when you first let me come—the Nights weren't like this. You weren't like this, any of you——"

"Upon—my—word!" said Miss Howe with her benevolent chuckle. "Nita! Listen to the infant!"

"Like what?" Mr. Flood moved uneasily.

The Baxter girl turned to him enthusiastically.

"Oh, I used to think you such wonderful people-"

"Did you now?" Miss Howe teased her.

"Let be! let be!" said Mr. Flood impatiently. "Well, dear lady?"

"Oh, I did! I'd read all your stuff. I believe

I could write out The Orchid House from memory still."

His eyes lit up as he challenged her-

"'Sour!' said the fox at her feet,
'How can she ripen windy-high?
Sour!' said the fox with his nose to the sky—"

He was as pleased as a child with a toy when she capped it—

"Then a grape dropped off. It was rotten sweet.

There!" she flushed at him triumphantly. And then—" Now did you mean——? Who was in your mind? Were they anyone we know? I've always wanted to ask you."

But before he eould answer her the blonde lady leaned forward and whispered in his ear. He turned to her with a glance of interest and amusement, but with his lips still moving and his mind still running on an answer to the Baxter girl. The blonde lady whispered again, and then he turned right round to answer her, shelving his arms on her knees. I couldn't hear what they said, but it was just as if she had beekoned him into another room. He was withdrawn from the conversation and from the Baxter girl for as long as that blonde lady chose.

Miss Howe looked at them with her broad smile. "Tell us, Beryl! We're listening, anyhow!" she said invitingly.

But the Baxter girl's chin went up. The touch of annoyance in her voice made it twang, made her commonness suddenly noticeable. She was bearable when she was in awe of them, but now she was asserting herself, and that meant that she was inclined to be noisy.

"Oh, my opinion doesn't count, of course! But—" she swung like a pendulum between her two manners—" oh, I did enjoy myself at first. It was the way you all talked. You knew everyone. You'd read everything. You frothed adventures. Like champagne it was, meeting all the people. I used to write my head off, the week after. And you were all kind to me from the first. I suppose it was Madala. She never let one feel out of it. But I thought it was all of you. I had the feeling—'the gods aren't jealous gods.' But now it's—" she looked at them pertly, "it's fog on Olympus."

"You needn't—honour us, you know, Beryl," said Anita sharply.

She answered with her furtive look.

"I know. And I don't think—I don't want to come as much as I did."

"In that case-" Anita ruffled up.

"Fog! Fog!" eried Miss Howe clapping her hands. And then—"All the same, Nita, people are dropping off. The Whitneys haven't been for weeks. When did Roy Huth come last? And the Golding crowd? I marvel that he turns up still." She nodded towards Kent Rehan. "Oh, you know, we're like a row of beads when the string's been pulled out. We lie in a line for a time, but a touch will send us rolling in all directions."

"Yes," said the Baxter girl vehemently, "the heart's out of it somehow. I'm not ungrateful. It's just because I used to love coming so."

Miss Howe looked down at Anita, not unkindly.

"Give it up, Nita! The Nights have served their turn. It sounds ungracious, but things have to end sometime or other. Hasn't the time come? Hasn't it come tonight?"

"But you've been coming all this year just the same," said Anita stubbornly.

Miss Howe shrugged her shoulders. It was the Baxter girl who answered—

"Ah, but there was always just a chance of seeing Madala."

At that Anita, who had been sitting as steely stiff as a needle in a pin-cushion, got up, shaking off Miss Howe's persuasive, detaining hand and the overflow of her skirts. The cushions tumbled after her on to the floor.

"As to that," she said, "and don't imagine that I haven't known what you came for, all of you——"Eh?"

Her voice was sharp enough to have recalled anyone and it recalled Mr. Flood. He returned to the conversation with the air of dragging the blonde lady after him. She had the manner of one hanging back and protesting, and laughing still over some secret understanding. "Eh?" said he. "What's that about Madala?"

Anita looked from one to another.

- "I'm telling you," she said. "I've told you already, I can give you Madala Grey. Come here and I'll give you Madala Grey still. That's what you want, isn't it, to be amused? She amused you."
 - "She did, bless her!" said Miss Howe.
 - "It was her brains," said the Baxter girl.
 - " Λ beautiful ereature," said Mr. Flood slowly.
- "Not she!" The lady behind him was smiling. "She made you think so. She made men think so. But how? That intrigued me. Oh, she was prettyish: but that was all. I used to watch her——"
 - "Envy?" said he.
- "No, not envy," said that woman slowly. "She was too—innocent—how could one envy? She didn't know her own strength. She said—'Don't hurt me,' with a sword at her side."
 - "Excalibur." It came from Mr. Flood. "Magic."
- "No, Madala—just Madala." Miss Howe sighed. "It's no good, Anita, you ean't give us back Madala."

But my cousin, looking at them, laughed in her turn.

"Madala? You fools! You've never had her. But you shall! Oh, wait! My books are dull, aren't they? Yet you'll be here, you know, every month, thick as bees, to listen to me. A chapter a month, that's all I'll give to you. I don't write three novels a year. But you'll come, you'll come. Proof? There's plenty of proof. See here."

She went swiftly across to the outer room. There was a large carved desk standing on the little table by the window. She picked it up. It was too big for her. It filled her arms so that she staggered under the weight.

"Oh, Kent!" she called.

He came back to the foggy room with a visible wrench.

"Here, that's too heavy for you. Let me." He took it from her.

"The table—here. Thank-you, oh, thank-you, Kent." She veiled her voice as she spoke to him. "It's heavy—it's so full—books—papers——"

He put it down for her and nodded, and was straying away again when she stopped him.

"Kent! Don't sit by yourself. We—"her voice was for him alone—"we're talking about—her. I was going to show them—Kent, stay here with us."

He waited while she talked to him. And she talked very sweetly and kindly. She was the quiet, chiffony little creature again with the pretty, pure voice. I couldn't make her out. She looked up at him and said something too low for me to catch, and then—

"There's your chair. Isn't that always your chair?" And so left him and turned to the table and the box and the others.

But he did not take the saddle-bag near Anita's own seat. He looked irresolutely from one to another of the group that watched Anita fumbling with her keys. He looked, and his face softened, at Great-aunt, muttering over her needles. He looked at the empty chair beside me. He looked at me and found me watching him. Then, as I smiled at him just a little, he came to me and sat down. But he said nothing to me, and so I was quiet too.

But Anita was busy, hands and eyes and tongue all busy.

"When she married, you know, in that hole and corner fashion——" Then, as if in answer, though nobody had spoken—" Well, what else was it, when nobody knew? when even I didn't know——"

There was a movement in the chair beside me, and turning, I caught the ending of a glanee towards my cousin. A new look, I found it, on that passive face, a roused and wondering and scornful look that transformed it. But, even as I caught it, it faded again to that other look of bleak indifference, a look to know and dread on any creature's face, a look that must not stay on any fellow-creature's face. I knew that well enough. So I said the first words that came, in my lowest voice, lest they should hear.

But they were talking. They did not hear.

"I'm sure that Great-aunt knew." Indeed I thought so. I think that Great-aunt would always be kind and guessing with a girl. Then I wondered at myself for daring it and thought nervously— 'He'll snub me. He'll be right to snub me——'

But he looked across at Great-aunt kindly and said, in just such a withdrawn voice as mine—

"Yes, of course, if ever there was a time when—"." Then he half smiled. "Poor old lady! But she's changed. She used to be so brisk and managing, more like fifty than seventy. But this year's aged her. She wanted, you know, to give some pearls—her own pearls. But pearls spell sorrow. And Anita would have objected. She told me all about it."

"She was speaking of them tonight." We both turned again and looked at her. She had dropped her knitting, or it had slipped from her knee, and she sat in her chair staring down at it with a terrible, comical air of helplessness. Then she caught his eye and forgot the knitting and nodded at him.

"I think—" I said, "I don't think she understands. She asked me—she forgets I'm a stranger. She asked me—" I broke off. I couldn't say to him—' She asked me about Miss Grey and she doesn't realize that she's dead.' One's afraid of the brutality of words. But he understood. There was a simplicity about him that re-assured one. And he never said—' It's Anita's business. It's not your business,' as anyone else might have done. He just said, once again—

"Poor old lady!" and hesitated a minute. Then he got up and went across to her and picked up her wools. I don't think the others noticed him go. Anita didn't. She was talking too fast.

"-left a trunk-full of papers and so on. I'd often stored boxes for her. Somehow it never got sent down. I came across it only yesterday. I thought to myself that there was no harm in putting things straight. You know I'm literary executor? Oh yes. She said to me soon after her marriage, half in joke, that she supposed she had got to make a will-and what about her MSS.? 'I can't have him worried.' I offered at once. You see I know so exactly her attitude in literature. There's a good deal of unpublished stuff—early stuff. But all in hopeless confusion. Tumbled up with bills and programmes and one or two drafts of lettersor so I imagine. She had that annoying habitthat ugly modern habit—of beginning without any invocation, and never a date. But there's one letter—there's the draft of a letter that's important from my point of view." She broke off with a half laugh. "It sounds a ridiculous statement to make about Madala Grey of all people, but do you know that she couldn't express herself at all easily on paper?"

Miss Howe nodded.

"Do I know? I've known her re-write a letter half a dozen times before she got it to her liking—no, not business letters, letters to her intimates. A most comical trick. Scribble, scribble, scribble—slash! and then crunch goes the sheet into a ball, into the grate, or near it, till it looked as if she were playing snow-balls, and then Madala begins again—and again—and again. Yet she talked well. She talked easily."

"Isn't that in keeping?" Mr. Flood struck in.
"She didn't express so much herself in her speech as the mood of the moment."

"As the mood of the companion of the moment more likely," the blonde lady corrected.

He nodded agreement.

"But for herself—go to her books."

"Or her letters—her careful, conscientious letters. But she was careless about her drafts," said Anita significantly.

Mr. Flood looked at her curiously.

"What's up that sleeve of yours, Anita?" She was quick.

"You shall read it, in its place. But the trouble is—" She hesitated. She gave the little nervous cough that always ushered in her public lectures. "We've all written books," she said, "all except you, Blanche—"

The blonde lady blinked her sleepy eyes.

"You're all so strenuous," she purred. "I love to watch you being strenuous. So soothing."

"Well, I was going to say, it's easy enough to end a book, but have you ever got to the beginning?

I never have. One steps backward, and backward again——"

"I know," cried the Baxter girl. "Till you get tired of it at last and begin writing from where you are, but you never really get your foot on the starting-point, on the spring-board, as you might say."

"That's it. Yes, Jasper, I've got material up my sleeve, but frankly, I don't know how to place it. I don't know where to begin. The facts of her life, her conversation, her literary work, her letters—I go on adding to my material till I am overwhelmed with all that I have got to say about her. But I don't want to begin with facts. Facts are well enough, but think how one can twist them! I want the woman behind the facts. I want the answer to the question that is the cause of a biography such as mine is to be—the question—'What was Madala Grey?' Not who, mark you, but further back, deeper into herself—'What was Madala Grey?'"

"Why, a genius," said the Baxter girl glibly.

Anita neither assented nor dissented.

"Ah—" she said frowning, "but that's not the beginning either. At once we take our step backward again—'What is genius?'"

"Isn't talent good enough?" said Mr. Flood acidly.

"But does one mean talent?" She was still frowning. "Everyone's got talent. I'm siek of talent. But she—she mayn't be a great one—how she'd have laughed at being called a great one!—but she makes her dolls live. And isn't that the blood-link between the greatest gods and the littlest gods? Life-givers? Life-makers? Oh, I only speak for myself; but she made her book-world real to me, therefore for me she had genius. Whether or not I convince you is the test of whether my life-work, my Life of her—fails or succeeds."

"I suppose you wouldn't trust it to Madala?" said Miss Howe softly.

"Trust what?"

"To eonvince us."

She answered, suspicious rather than comprehending, for indeed Miss Howe's tone was very smooth—

"What do you mean? I'm writing her life." Miss Howe was inscrutable.

"Of course you are. Fire ahead. Genius, wasn't it?"

Anita shrugged her shoulders.

"What's in a name? It's the quality itself that fascinates me. I want to account for it. I want to trace it to its source. Worth doing, isn't it? But do you realize the difficulties? Sometimes I feel hopeless. I've known her five years, and her books I know by heart, and I'm only just beginning to decide whether to call her a romantie or a realist."

"A realist. Look at Eden Walls," said the Baxter girl.

"A romantic. Look at The Resting-place," said Miss Howe.

Mr. Flood over-rode them.

"Dear ladies, you confuse the terms. It amazes me how people always confuse the terms. Your so-called realist, your writer who depicts what we call reality, the outward life, that is, of flesh and dirt and misery-don't vou see that he is in truth a romantie—a man (or woman) who lives in a fair world of his own, a paradise of the imagination? Out of that secure world of his he peers curiously at ours, and writes of it as we dare not write, writes down every sordid, garish, tragi-comic detail. Your so-ealled realist can afford the humour of Rabelais, the horror of Dostoievsky, the cheerful flesh and blood of Fielding. Why shouldn't he be truthful? It's not his world. Don't you see? But your so-ealled romantic, he lives in this real world. He knows it so well that he has to shut his eyes or he would die of its reality. So he escapes into the world of romance, the world of beauty within his own mind-nowhere but in his own mind. Who is our dreamer of dreams? Shelley, the realist! Blake jogged elbows with poverty and squalor all his life, and he was the prophet and the king of all spirits. Don't you see? And Goethe-the biographers will tell you that Goethe began as a realist and ended as a romantie. I say it was the other way round. What did he know of reality in the twenties? Its discovery was the romantic adventure of his young genius. But when he was old and worldly and wise—then he wrote his romances, to escape from his own knowledge. Oh, I tell you, you should turn the words round. Now take Shakespeare——"

"It's not fair to take Shakespeare," said Miss Howe. "It's the Elephant and the Crawfishes over again. Let's keep to the crawfishes! Let's keep to our own generation!"

"Well, if I were Anita I should begin by showing Madala as a romantic—as the young romantic producing the most startlingly realistic book we've had for a decade. Indeed to me, you know, her development is marked by her books in the sharpest way. It's the young, the curious, the observant Madala in Eden Walls. The whole book is a shout of discovery, of young, horrified discovery, of the ugliness of life. It's as if she said-'Listen! Listen! These things actually happen to some people. Isn't it awful?' She dwells on it. She insists on every detail. She can't get away from it. And yet she can hardly believe it, that young Madala. But in Ploughed Fields already the tone's changing. a pleasanter book, a more sophisticated book. interests profoundly, but it's careful not to upset one—an advance, of course. Yet I, you know, hear our Madala's voice in it still, an uneasy voice-'Hush! Hush! These things happen to most people. Pretend not to notice.' And in the last book, in the pretty, impossible romance, there you have your realist full-fledged—'Shut your eyes! Come away quickly! These things are happening to me!'" He leant back again folding his arms and dropping his chin. And then, because Miss Howe was looking at him as if she were amused—"I tell you I know. I recognize the symptoms. I'm a realist myself. That's why I write romantic poetry. Have to. It's that or drugs. How else shall one get through life?"

"Jasper!" said the blonde lady. But for once he didn't turn to her. He shrugged his shoulders.

"Don't worry. Who'll believe me?"

The Baxter girl was breathless.

"Oh, but I do. It's a new Madala, of course. But I believe it explains her."

"But the facts of her life don't agree," began Miss Howe.

"Ah, Anita's got to make 'cm," said Mr. Flood languidly. "Isn't that the art of biography?"

But Anita was deadly serious.

"You don't begin far enough back. My spring-board is not—what is Madala? but—what is genius? How does it happen? Is it immaculate birth? or is it begotten of accident upon environment? That is to say—is it inspiration or is it experience? I speak of the divine fire, you understand, not of the capacity for resolving it into words or paint or stone. That's eraft, a very different thing. You say that Madala was not a genius in the big sense—yes, I'll admit that even, for the argument's sake—but even you will concede her the beginnings of it. So my difficulty is just the same. I've never believed in instinctive genius. Yet how can she, at twenty, have had the experience (that she had the craft is amazing enough) to cope with Eden Walls? Romantic curiosity isn't enough explanation, Jasper! Look at her certainty of touch. Look at her detail. Look how she gets inside that woman's mind. That's the fascination of it. It's such a document. Now how does she know it? That's what intrigues me. Madala and a street woman! Where's the connection? How does she get inside her? Because she does get inside her."

"Oh, it's real enough," said the blonde lady.

"It must be. You should have seen the letters she received! Amazing, some of them."

"Anita, they amazed her. I remember her getting one while she was staying with us. She looked thoroughly frightened. She said—'But Lila, I didn't realize—it was just a story. But this poor thing, she says it's true! She says it's happened to her! What are we to do?' You know, she was nearly crying. It was some hysterical woman who had read the book. But Madala always believed in people. I know she wrote to her. I believe she helped her. But she never told you much about her doings."

"Oh, her sentimental side doesn't interest me. What I ask myself is—how does she know, as she obviously does know, all that her wretched drab of a heroine thought and felt and suffered?"

"Instinct! Imagination!" said the Baxter girl.
"It must be the explanation."

"It isn't. It isn't. Oh, I've puzzled it out. I'm convinced that from the beginning it's experience. Don't flare, Lila, I don't mean literal experience. Not in Eden Walls, anyhow. Later, of course—but we're discussing Eden Walls. Imagination, do you say, Beryl? But the imagination must have a fact for its root. I'll grant you that imagination is so essentially a quality of youth that the merest rootlet of a reality is enough to set a young artist beanstalk elimbing. But the older he grows, the wiser, the more versed in reality, the less he trusts his imagination, the more, in consequence, his imagination flags and withers: till he ends-one sees it happen again and again-as the recorder merely of his own actual experiences and emotions. It's only the greatest who escape that decay of the imagination. Do you think that Madala did? Look at Eden Walls. Remember what we know about her. Can't you see that the skeleton of Eden Walls is Madala's own life? Consider her history. She leaves what seems to have been a happy childhood behind her and sets out on adventure—very young. So does the woman in Eden Walls. The parallel's exact. Madala's Westering Hill and the Breckonridge of the novel are the same place. The house, the lane, the country-side, she doesn't trouble to disguise them. Again-Madala's adventure is ushered in by calamity: and tragedy—(you can see the artist transmuting the mere physical calamity into tragedy) tragedy happens to the woman in Eden Walls. Remember how much more Madala dwelt on the sense of loneliness and lovelessness, on the anguish of the loss of something to love her, than on what one might call the-er-official emotions of a betrayed woman. Didn't it strike you? Doesn't that show that she was depending on her experience rather than on her imagination, fitting her own private grief to an imaginary case? Then, in America, she has the struggle for meat and drink, for mere existence. So does the woman in Eden Walls. Madala does not go under. The woman in Eden Walls does. It's the first real difference. But I maintain that in reality the parallel still continues, that, in imagination, Madala did go under over and over again: that she had ever in front of her the 'suppose, suppose,' that, in drawing the woman in Eden Walls, she is saying to herself— 'Here, but for the grace of God, go I.' And then, you know, when you think of her, hating that big city, saving up her pennies, and coming home at last in a passion of homesickness (if it was homesickness-sickness anyhow), can't you see how it makes her write of that other woman? It's the gift, the genius, stirring in her: born, not immaculately, but of her own literal experience. Jasper's right—you can always make facts fit if you think them out: and because I possess that underlying shadow-work (I admit it's no more) of fact to guide me in deciphering her method in the first book, therefore, in the second book and the third book, I find it safe to deduce facts to cover the stories, even when I don't possess them. I consider that I'm justified, that Eden Walls justifies me. Don't you?"

"It's plausible," said Mr. Flood thoughtfully.

"Oh, it's convincing," said the Baxter girl reverently. "I feel I've never known Madala Grey before. What it will be when you get it into shape, Miss Serle——"

"In fact," said Miss Howe, "there's only one drawback——"

"And that?" said Anita swiftly.

"Only Madala's own account."

"She never discussed her methods," said Anita sharply.

"Just so! You're not the only person who's—pumped. I remember seeing her once surrounded, in her lion days. I remember her ingenuous explanations. She did her best to oblige them—' Honestly, I don't know. One just sits down and imagines.' And then—'That's quite easy. But it's awfully difficult writing it down.' That's the explanation, Nita. A deliberate, even unconscious self-exploitation is all nonsense. Madala's not elever enough."

"Not clever enough!"

"No. You're much cleverer than she was. You have twice her brains. You can't think, Anita, what brains you've got. You've got far too many to understand a simple person. I don't agree, you know, with 'genius.' I can't throw a word like that about so lightly. But as far as it went with Madala, it was the same sort of genius that makes a crocus push in the spring. Your theory—oh, it's plausible, as Jasper says, but don't you see that it destroys all the charm of her work? It's the innocence of her knowledge, the simplicity of her attitude to her own insight that to me is moving. She touches pitch, yet her fingers are clean. It's her view of her story that arrests one, not her story, not her facts, not her mere plot."

"No, the plot is conventional, I'll grant you that. She was always content with old bottles."

"Yes, and when the new wine burst them and made a mess on the carpet, Madala was always so surprised and indignant."

Mr. Flood giggled.

"Pained is the word, dear lady—surprised and pained. Do you remember when Eden Walls was banned?"

"I don't suppose she talked to you about it, Jasper," said Miss Howe sharply.

"I? I was never of her counsels. But I got my amusement out of the affair. Dear, delightful woman! She behaved like a schoolgirl sent to Coventry. I remember congratulating her on the advertisement, and she would hardly speak to me. But it suited her, the blush."

"Wasn't it an advertisement!" said the Baxter girl longingly.

"If one could have got her to see it," said Anita. "But no, she insisted on being ashamed of herself. She said to me once that the critics had 'read in' things that she had never dreamed of—that it made her doubt her own motives—that she felt dirtied and miserable. And yet she wouldn't alter one of those seenes. Obstinate! She could be very obstinate."

"Oh, which scenes?" The Baxter girl stuck her elbows on the table and her chin in her fists. Her eyes sparkled. "Oh, then, Miss Serle, did you—? did she come to you in the early days? Did you help her too?"

"My daughter-very kind to young people!"

It was a mere mutter, but I recognized the swing of the phrase. Anita didn't. She was busy with the Baxter girl.

"I don't say that there would be no Madala Grey today if I——"

"But—" said Mr. Flood.

"But—" said Miss Howe, "she's Anita's discovery. We're never to forget that, are we, darling?"

"Oh, I knew that," said the Baxter girl, trying to be tactful. "But Eden Walls was written before you knew her, wasn't it? I understood—I didn't know, I mean," she explained to them, "that Miss Serle had—blue-pencilled——"

"I did and I didn't." Anita laughed, as if in spite of herself. "I confess I thought at the time that it needed revision. Mind you, I never questioned the quality, but I knew what the public would stand and what it wouldn't. Of course, I didn't want the essentials altered. But there were certain cuts—— However, nothing would move her."

"That's funny. She never gave me the impression that she believed in herself so strongly."

"Oh, her pose was diffidence," said the blonde lady.

"But she didn't believe in herself. It was obvious. When I went through her MS. and bluepencilled, she was most grateful. She agreed to everything and took the MS. away to remodel."

"And then?"

н

"I heard nothing more of her—for weeks. Finally I wrote and asked her to come and see me. She came. She was delightful. I had told her, you know, about the Anthology the first time I met her. I remember that I was annoyed with myself afterwards. I'm not often indiscreet. But she had a—a knack—a way with her. I hardly know how to describe it."

"One told her things," said the Baxter girl.

"Just so. One told her things. And she had brought me a mass of material—some charming American verse (you remember? in the last section but one) that I had never come across. She had been reading for me at the British Museum in her spare time. I confess I was touched. We talked, I remember——" She sighed reminiscently. "It was not until she made a move to go that I recollected myself. 'Well,' I said, 'and how about Eden Walls?' She fidgeted. She looked thoroughly guilty. At last it came out. She hadn't altered a line. She had tried her utmost. She had drafted and re-drafted. She had finally given it up in despair and just got work in some obscure newspaper office—'a most absorbing office!' But there—you know Madala when she's interested—was interested—"

"Don't," said Miss Howe softly.

But Anita went on-

"'Well but—' I said to her—'that's all very well. But you're not going to abandon Eden Walls, are you?' Then it all came out. Yes, she was. She knew I was right. She wasn't conceited. She quite saw that the book was useless. It just meant that she couldn't write novels and that she mustn't waste any more time. 'But my dear Miss Grey,' I said, 'you mean to say that you'd rather leave the book unpublished than alter a couple of chapters, remodel a couple of characters?' 'But I can't,' she said, 'I can't. They happened that way.' 'Then make them happen differently,' I said. But no, she couldn't. 'Oh well,' I said at last—'if you're so absolutely sure of yourself, if you're prepared to set up your judgment—' That distressed her. I can hear her now. 'But I don't set up my judgment. I'll burn the wretched stuff to-morrow if you say it's trash. I knew it would be, in my heart. But—I can't alter it, because—because it happened that way.' Then I had an idea. 'To you?' I said. She looked at me. She laughed. She said—'Miss Serle, you've written ten books to my one. Don't pretend you don't know how a story happens.'" Anita nodded at us. "You see? Evasive. I think it was from that moment that I began to have my theory of her."

"Well—and what next?" demanded Miss Howe.

"She would have said good-bye if I had let her. I stopped her. 'Reconsider it,' I said. She beamed at me, chastened but quite cheerful. 'Oh, I'll try another some day,' she said. 'I suppose I'm not old enough. I was a fool to think I could.' At that, of course, I gave in. I wasn't going to lose sight of Eden Walls. I told her to bring it as it was and I'd see what I could do. As you know, Mitchell and Bent jumped at it."

"But it was banned," said the Baxter girl.

"Yes, but everybody read it. You can get it anywhere now. And I can say now—'Thank the gods she didn't touch it.'"

"Then she was right?"

- "Of course she was right. I knew it all the time."
 - "And she didn't?"
- "Of course she didn't. Mine was critical knowledge. Hers the mere instinct of—whatever you choose to eall it. I was afraid of the critics. She didn't know enough to be afraid."

"There's something big about you, Anita!" said Miss Howe suddenly.

Mr. Flood gave the oblique flicker of eyes and mouth that was his smile.

- "Yes," he said slowly, "it fits her quite well."
- "What?" said Anita sharply.
- "The mantle, dear lady."

She shrugged her shoulders.

- "Ah—Gentle dullness ever loves a joke. What, Beryl?"
- "I don't see," the Baxter girl had harked back, how you can call a book that has been banned conventional."
 - "Only the plot—"
- "Ah, that plot!" Nobody could snub Mr. Flood. "Think, dear lady! Village maiden—faithless lover—lights o' London—unfortunate female—what more do you want?"
- "Of course." Anita resumed the reins. "It's as old as The Viear of Wakefield."
- "Oh, that!" The Baxter girl looked interested.
 "Do you know, I've never seen it. One of Irving's shows, wasn't it?"

I laughed. I couldn't help it. But they were all quite solcmn, even Anita. But then she never did listen to the Baxter girl. She had talked straight through her sentences.

"But it's not the material. It's the way it's handled. It's never been done quite so thoroughly, from the woman's point of view—so unadornedly. People are afraid of their 'poor girls.' There's a formula that even the Immortals follow. They are all young and beautiful, and they all die. They must. They wouldn't be tragic in continuation. But Madala's woman doesn't. That's the point. There's no pretence at making her a heroine. She's just the ordinary stupidish sheep of a creature, 'gone wrong.' There's no romantic halo, no love-glamour, no pity and terror, just the chronicle of a sordid life. And yet you can't put the book down. At least I couldn't put it down.

"Do you like it?" I said to Kent Rehan, as he paused beside me in his eternal pacing from room to room.

He looked at me oddly.

"I respect it," he said. "I don't like it. People misjudged——"

"If it had been the recognized love story"—Mr. Flood's high voice silenced him—"the regularized irregularity, so to speak, it wouldn't have been banned. It was the absence of a love story that the British public couldn't forgive. It was cheated. It was shocked."

"But there is a love story at the beginning, isn't there?" I said. "I haven't read far."

Instantly the Baxter girl exhibited me-

"Yes, imagine! She hasn't read it!"

"I've read The Vicar of Wakefield," I said. And then I was annoyed that I had shown I was annoyed. But at once Miss Howe helped me. Miss Howe was always nice to me.

"How far have you got? Where the man tires of her? Ah, ves! Well, after that it's just her struggle. She-she earns her living-in the inevitable way. She grows into a miser. She hoards."

Mr. Flood looked acute.

"That's what upset them. They don't mind a Magdalen; but Magdalen unaware, unrepentant, Magdalen preserving her ill-gotten gains—no, that's not quite nice."

"Well, I don't know," said Miss Howe. "If anyone ean't feel the spirit it's written in, the passion of pity—I think it's the most pitiful thing I've ever read. It made me shiver. That wretched ereature, saving and sparing-" And then to me, for I suppose I showed I was interested-"She wants to get away, you know, to get back into the country. It's her dream. The home-sickness----'

"I suppose such a woman could-?" said the Baxter girl.

"I used to argue it with Madala. Madala always said that, with some people, that animal eraving for some special place was like love—a passion that eould waste you. She said that every woman must have some devouring passion, for a man, or a child, or a place-every woman. And that for a beaten creature like that, it would be place—the homing instinct of a cat or a bird. And mixed up with it, religion—the vague shadowy ideal of peace and cleanly beauty-all that the wretched ereature tries to express in her phrase-'getting out and living quiet'-that Madala typifies in the word 'Eden.' It meant much to Madala. Don't vou remember that passage towards the end of the book where she meets the man, the first man, and brings him home with her—and he doesn't even recognize her, and she doesn't even care?" She pieked up a bundle of tattered proofs and turned them over. "Where is it? What an appalling hand she had!" She stood a moment, reading a page and pursing her lips. "Oh, well, what's the use of reading it? We all know it." She flung it down.

"Let me see," I said to the Baxter girl. She drew it towards me. It was the first proof I'd ever seen. It was corrected till it was difficult to read. But I made it out at last.

With the closing of the door she dismissed him with one phrase for ever from her mind—

"And that's that!"

She had long been accustomed thus to summarize her clients, dispassionately, as one classes beasts at a show; and she judged them, not by their clothing or their speech, not by the dark endured hours of their love or by the ticklish after-moment of the reckoning, but rather, as she hovered at the door with her provocative night smile dulled to a business friendliness, by their manner of leaving her.

Always there was the fever to be gone; but some went furtively, with cautious, tiptoe feet that set the stairs a-squeak with mockery. Her smile did not change for the swaggerer who stayed long and took his luck-kiss twice, but her eyes would harden. Mean, cheating mean, to kiss again and never pay again! And some she watched and smiled upon who left her in a brutal silence. For them she had no resentment, rather the sullenness beneath her smile reached out to the revulsion of their bearing as to something welcomed and akin. And some gave back her smile with kindly words—and those she hated.

But when, after his manner, the man had gone, she had, as always, her ritual

She locked her easy door and pulling out the key, put it before her on the table at the bedside. Left and right of it she laid her money down, adding to the night's gains the meagre leavings of her purse. Left and right the little piles grew, one heaped high for the needs of her day and her night, for food and roof and livery, and one a thin scatter of coppers and small silver that took long weeks to change into the dear, the exquisite, the Eden-opening gold. It was the bigger pile that she thrust so carelessly back into her bag, and the scattered ha'pence that she warmed in the cup of her two hands, holding them, jingle-jingle, at her ears, dropping them to her lap again to count anew, piling them before her to a little, narrowing tower, before she opened the child's jewel-case beside her, and, lifting the sheaf of letters that she never read but kept still and would always keep, for the savage pain they gave her when her eyes saw them and her fingers touched them, she poured out the new treasure upon the sacred hoard beneath.

Tenpence saved—and yesterday a shilling! Five shillings last week. Fifty pounds! She would soon have fifty pounds!

She put away the box of money, and so, surrendering at last to the awful bodily fatigue, lay down again upon the tousled bed, not to sleep—her sleeping time was later in the day—but to shut her eyes.

For, by the amazing pity of God, a secret that is not every man's, was hers—the secret of the refuge appointed, behind shut eyes, of the return into eternity that is the shutting down of lids upon the eyes. The window glare, the screaming street below, the blank soiled ceiling with the flies, the walls, the unending pattern of the hateful walls, the clock, the finery, the beastly scents, the loathed familiars of stuff and wood and brass that blinked and creaked at her like voices crying-"Misery! misery!"-these were her world. Yet not her only world. She, who was so dim and blunted a woman-thing, could pass, with the warm dark velvet touch of dropping lids, not into the nullity of sleep, but into the grey place, limitless, timeless, where consciousness knows nothing of the flesh.

She shut her eyes with the sigh of a tired dog, and instantly her soul lay back and floated, resting.

There was no time, no thought, no feeling. There was peace—quiet—greyness. At unmeasured intervals realization washed over her like waves, waves of peace—quiet—greyness. Greyness—she worshipped the blessed greyness. She wanted to give it a beloved name and knew none. 'When I am dead!'—'For ever and ever, Amen!'—So she came nearest to 'Eternity.'

Peace—quiet—greyness: greyness enduring for ever, that could yet be rent asunder like a temple veil and let in misery—the window glare, the recking room, the clodding footsteps, the fingers tapping at her door—a frail eternity whose walls were slips of flesh.

She called harshly-

"Get out! Get away! Put it down outside then, ean't you?"

There was a mutter and the clank of a scuttle-lid, and a thud. The footsteps shuffled out of hearing.

She shut her eyes again.

Peace—quiet—greyness. The waves were rocking her. She did not dream. There are, by that same pity of God, no dreams permitted in the place of refuge. But, as she lay in peace, she watched her own memorial thoughts rising about her, one by one, like bubbles in a glass, like cocks crowing in the dark of the dawn.

A white road . . . the hill-top wind panting down it like a runner . . . dust . . . bright blue sky . . . skyblue succory in the gutter . . . succory is so difficult to pick . . . tough . . . it leaves a green cut on one's finger . . . succory in a pink vase on the mantel-piece . . . the fire's too hot for flowers . . . hot buttered toast . . . the armchair wants mending . . . the horsehair tickles one's ears as one lies back in it and warms one's toes and watches the rain drowning the fields outside . . . empty winter fields, all tousled and tussocky from eow dung . . . grey skies . . . snow . . . not a soul in sight . . . and succory in a pink vase on the mantel-piece . . . because one's back in Eden . . . summer and winter are all one in Eden . . . picking buttercups in Eden as one used to do . . . all the fields grown full of buttereups . . . fifty buttereups make a bunch . . . fifty golden buttercups with the King's head on them . . . hurry up with the buttercups . . . one more bunch of buttercups will buy back Eden—Eden—ah!

So, with a long gasping sigh would come the end. "Eden—" and the longing would be upon her, tearing like a wild beast at her eyes and her throat and her heart—"I want to go home. Oh God, let me go home! Let me out! Let me out! I want to go home—"

The chapter ended.

"And does she?" I looked up at the Baxter girl. "I'm always afraid of a bad ending. Does she get back in the end?"

The Baxter girl fluttered through the pages.

"The money's stolen first—a man takes it—while she's asleep—— Oh, it's beastly, that seene. She has to save it all up again. It takes her years. But—oh, yes, she does go back."

"The railway journey," said Miss Howe. "Do you remember?"

"If you want happy endings—" the Baxter girl flattened out the last page with a jerk—"there you are!"

I read over her shoulder. The strong scent that hung about her seemed to float between me and the page.

"Here we are—where she gets to the station. 'Eden,' Madala calls it, but the woman calls it 'Breckonridge.'

At last and at last the station-board with the familiar name flashed past her window. She thrilled. The station lamps repeated it as the train slowed down. She thought—how long the platform's grown!...a bookstall!... a bookstall on each side!... there used not to be ... wasn't the station smaller?...

She spoke to the ticket collector shyly, blushing, like a girl going to an assignation and thinking that all the world must know it.

He answered, already catching at the ticket of the traveller behind her—

"How far to Breekonridge? A mile, maybe—but you get the tram at the corner."

She stared. She would have questioned him again, but the throng of people pressed her forward.

A tram through the village? . . . queer! . . . not that it mattered to her . . . she would take the old short cut through the fields outside the station yard. . . . There was a stile . . . and a wild cherry tree. . . .

She left the yard, the unfamiliar yard with asphalt and motors and a great iron bridge, crossed the road, and stopped bewildered.

There were no fields.

'Station Road.' The labelled yellow villas were like a row of faces. Eyes, nose, mouth—windows, porch, steps—steps like teeth. They grinned.

In a sort of panie she ran past them down the road, a lumbering, clumsy woman. She trod on her skirt, and recovered herself with difficulty. She heard a small boy laugh and call after her. She elambered on to the tram.

- "I want to go to the village—to Breekonridge—"
- "It's all Breckonridge. 'Ow far?"

She stared.

- "I don't remember. He said a mile."
- "Town 'All, I expect." He took his toll and passed on 108

She turned vaguely to a neighbour.

"Town Hall? I don't remember. The road's all different. Where are the fields?"

The neighbour nodded.

"Built over. When were you here last? Thirty years? My word, you'll find changes! I notice it, even in five. Very full it's getting Good train service. My husband can get to his office under the hour."

She said dazedly—

"It was—it is—a little village."

The woman laughed.

"I daresay. But how long ago?"

"There were fields," she said under her breath "There were flowers—"

"Here's the Town Hall. Didn't you want the Town Hall?"

Unsteadily she rose and got out. The tram clanged forward.

She stood on an island where four roads met and looked about her. The sun stared down at her, a brazen city sun. The asphalt was hot and soft under her feet. Road-menders were at work in the fair-way. They struck alternately at the chisel between them and it was as if the rain of blows fell upon her. She felt stupid and dizzy. She did not know where to turn. There was nothing left of her village, and yet the place was familiar. There were drab houses and rows of shops and a stream of traffic, and the figures of women and men—menacing, impersonal figures of men—that hurried towards her down the endless streets.

[&]quot;Well?" said the Baxter girl.

[&]quot;But that's not the end?" I said. The Baxter girl looked at me oddly.

"Why not?" And then—"How else could it end? How would you make it end?"

"Oh, I don't mean——" I began. I hesitated. "I don't think I quite understand," I said.

That was the truth. At the time I couldn't follow it. It moved me. It swept me along. But whether it was good or bad I didn't know. I hadn't the faintest idea of what it was driving at. I felt in a vague way that the people at home wouldn't have liked it.

"What does it mean?" I said to the Baxter girl.

"That you can't eat your cake and have it, I suppose. You can get out of Eden, but you can't get back."

Anita answered her contemptuously—

"Is that all it means to you?"

And yet we had spoken very softly. But Anita had eyes that ate up every movement in a room, and her small pretty ears never seemed to miss a significant word though ten people were talking. I had seen her glance uneasily at us and again at the two in the other room. I knew Great-aunt's mutter was too low even for her, and Kent Rehan only nodded now and then, but even that annoyed her. She lifted her own voice to be sure that they should hear all that she said, as if afraid lest, even for a moment, she should be left out of their thoughts.

"Oh!" she said loudly and contemptuously, "I tell you what I see."

She succeeded, if that pleased her. Kent Rehan raised his head and stared across at her with that impersonal expression of attention that, I was beginning to realize, could always anger her on any face. She had said a little while ago that she only cared for Miss Grey as an artist, and I believe that she believed it. But I don't think—I shall never think it true. I think Anita depended—depends, on other people more than she dreams. Poor Anita! I can see her now, her whole personality challenging those dark abstracted eyes. But she spoke to the Baxter girl—

"When Madala Grey chose Eden Walls for her title—when she flung it in the public face——"

I saw him give a shrug of fatigue or distaste—I couldn't tell which. Great-aunt, who had been sitting, her head on one side, with her sharp pollparrot expression, crooked her finger at me. I went across to her and behind me I heard the Baxter girl—

"You talk as if she were in a passion-"

And Anita-

"So she was. I'm telling you. It's the wrongs, not of one woman, but of all women, of all ages of women, that burn behind it."

"Votes for Women!" It was Mr. Flood's voice. There was a laugh and I lost an answer. I eaught only a vehement blur of words, because Great-aunt had me by the wrist.

"Chatter, chatter! I ean't hear 'em. What's my daughter talking about?"

I hesitated.

- "About books, Auntie."
- "Whose books?" she pounced.
- "Some writer, Auntie."
- "What's she saying about her, ch?" She held me bent down to her. I glanced at Kent Rehan. He was listening to us. I felt harried.
- "About—oh—whether a genius—whether she was a genius——"
 - " Madala, eh?"
 - "Yes, Auntie."

I thought I heard him sigh. And at that—why, I don't know—I turned on him. I was rude, I believe. I sounded silly and cruel, I know. Yet, heaven knows, that that was the last thing I wanted to be.

I said angrily to him-

"Oh, why do you stand there and listen? Don't you see that I can't help myself? Why don't you go away? What good can it do you to stay here, to stay and listen to it all?"

Then I stopped because he looked at me for a moment, and flushed, and then did turn away, back again to his old dreary post at the street window.

Great-aunt ehuekled.

"That's right, little Jenny. Take your own way with them, Jenny!"

I said—

"Let me go, Auntie dear," and I loosed her hand from my wrist and went after him; for of course the instant the words were out of my mouth I was ashamed of myself. I couldn't think what had possessed me. I was badly ashamed of myself.

I came to him and said-

"Mr. Rehan—I don't mean to be rude. Greataunt—she doesn't understand. She made me talk. It wasn't rudeness; but you stood there, and I knew—I thought I knew, what you must think, must be thinking—" (but 'feeling' was the word I meant) "and I was sorry. I was angry because I was sorry. I didn't mean to be rude."

He said-

"It's all right. I didn't think you rude."
Then I said—

"But I meant it. Why do you stay? What good can it do you? Why don't you go away from it all?"

And he--

"Where is there to go? I've been tramping all day."

"Where?"

"I don't know. Up and down streets. It's—it's blinding, it's stifling——"

"The fog is," I said quickly. But we didn't mean the fog.

He let himself down into the low wicker chair. I stood leaning against the sill, watching him.

"You're just dead tired." I said.

He nodded. Then, as if something in my words had stung him-

"Where else? I've always come here. Every month. It was natural to come."

"But now—" I said (and I was so urgent with him because of all their talk that drummed still in my mind like a wasps' nest)—"I'd go away if I were you. What good does it do you? They talk. It's—it's rather hateful. I've been listening. I'd go."

"Where?" he said again. And I-

"Haven't you anvone-at home?"

But as I asked I knew that he hadn't. He had the look. Oh, he wore good clothes and I knew he wasn't poor. But it was written all over him that he looked after himself and did it expensively and badly. He had, too, that other look that goes with it-of a man who has never found anyone more interesting to him than himself. And the queer part was that it didn't seem selfish in him-and I'm sure it wasn't. It was just like the way a child takes you for granted, and tells you about its own big affairs, and never guesses that you have your own little affairs too. I suppose it was a fault in him; but it made me like him. And he talked to me simply and almost as if he needed helping out; as if he'd been just anybody. I never had to help out anyone before: it had always been the other way round. I'd thought, too, that eelebrated people were always superior and brilliant and overwhelming, like Anita and Mr. Flood. But he wasn't. He was as simple as A.B.C. I liked him. I did like him.

I felt happier, more at peace, standing there with him than I had felt since I had been in Anita's house. I think he would have gone on talking to me too, if it hadn't been for the Baxter girl. She spoilt it. She tilted back her chair yawning, and so caught sight of us, and laughed, and leaning over to Miss Howe, whispered in her ear. She was a crazy girl. At once I got up and came across to them, panic-stricken, hating her. I had to. I didn't want him worried, and you never knew what hateful thing the Baxter girl wouldn't say, and think that she was pleasing you.

But without knowing it, Anita helped me. Her voice, rising excitedly in answer to some word of Mr. Flood's, recalled the Baxter girl.

"Mystery? Of course there's a mystery! She was at the height of her promise in Ploughed Fields. It's as good as Eden Walls in matter and, technically, better still. The third book ought to have settled her place in modern literature for good and all. It ought to have been her master-piece. But what does she do? We expect a chaplet of pearls, and she gives us a daisy-chain. Isn't that a mystery worth solving? Won't people read the Life for that if for nothing else? Am I the only person who has asked what happened to her between her second and her third books?"

"I tell you, but you won't listen," Mr. Flood insisted. "Your romantic has become a realist and is flying from it to the resting-place of romance."

"I do listen. Just so. You use your words and I use mine, but we mean the same thing. She's been bruising herself against facts. She has been walled up by facts. Her vision is gone. Now what was, in her case, the all-obscuring fact?"

"She was a woman," said the blonde lady. "It could only be one thing. Don't I know the signs?

She even lost her sense of humour."

"Yes, she did, didn't she?" cried the Baxter girl in a voice of relief. "Oh, I remember one day, just before the engagement was announced—"

"As if that had anything to do with it," said

Anita scornfully.

"—and she'd been so absent-minded I couldn't get anything out of her. I thought I knew her well enough to tease her. I had told her all my affairs. So—'I believe you're in love,' I said. 'Oh, well, you'll get over it. It's a phase." Was there any harm in that? It was only repeating what you had said to me about her, you know," she reminded the blonde lady. "But she froze instantly. She made no comment. She just changed the subject. But I felt as if I had been introduced to a new Madala. I wished I hadn't said it."

"You are a little fool, Beryl," said the blonde lady tolerantly.

"But she was altered," insisted the Baxter girl.
"The old Madala would have laughed."

"Yes, she was altered," said Anita. "Her whole attitude to herself and her work changed that spring. How she horrified me one day. It was soon after Ploughed Fields came out, and we were talking about her new book, at least I was, pumping a little I confess, and suddenly she said—'Anita, I don't think I'll write any more. This stuff-' she had her hands on Eden Walls, 'it's harsh, it's ugly; and so's Ploughed Fields. Isn't it?' 'It's true to life,' I said, 'that's the triumph of it.' 'Is it?' she said. She looked at me in an uneasy sort of way. And then-'I'd like to write a kind book, a beautiful book.' I told her that she couldn't, that she was a realist. 'That's why,' she said, 'I don't think I'll write any more.' I laughed, of course. Anybody would have laughed. 'Oh,' she said, 'I mean it. I haven't an idea in my head. I'm tired and empty. I think I shall go away for a wander. There's always the country, anyhow.' 'Well, Madala,' I said, 'I think you're ungrateful. You're a made woman. You've got your name: you've got your line: you've got your own gift---' 'Oh, that!' she said, as if she were flicking off a fly. I was irritated. It was so arrogant. 'What more do you want?' I asked her. 'What more can you want?' She said-'I don't know,' looking at me, you know, as if she expected me to tell her. I disliked that mood of hers. One did expect, with a woman of her capacity, to be entertained as it were, to have ideas presented, not to be asked to provide them. Then she began, à propos of nothing at all—'If I ever marry—-' That startled me. We'd never touched on the subject before. 'Oh, my dear Madala,' I said, 'you must never think of anything so—so unnecessary. For you, of all people, it would be fatal. It would waste your time, it would distract your thoughts, it would narrow your outlook, it would end by spoiling your work altogether. I've seen it happen so often. It's terrible to me even to think of a woman with a future like yours, throwing it away just for the——'She interrupted me. 'I wouldn't marry for the sake of getting married, if you mean that. Not even for children.'"

"You didn't mean that, did you, Anita?" said Miss Howe smiling a little.

"Certainly not. But I had always been afraid that she might be tempted to marry for the adventure's sake, for the mere experience, for the——"

"Copy," said Mr. Flood. "I always said so. Yes?"

"'Oh well, Madala,' I said to her, 'you know what I think. I'm not one to quote Kipling, but—He travels fastest who travels alone.' She looked at me so strangely. 'Alone?' she said. 'Alone. It's the eruellest word in the language. There's drowning in it.' 'Well, without conceit, Madala,' I said, 'I can affirm that I have been alone, spiritually, all my life.' 'Ah, yes,' she said, 'but you're different.' And that," Anita broke off, "was what I liked in Madala. She did recognize differences. She could appreciate. She wasn't absorbed in herself. She said to me quite humbly-'I'm not strong, I suppose; but I don't suffice myself. I can't bear myself sometimes. I can't bear the burden of myself. Can't you understand?' 'Frankly,' I said, 'I can't. I'm a modern woman, and the modern woman is a pioneer. She's the Columbus of her own individuality. She must be. It's her career. It's her destiny.' She answered me pettishly, like a naughty child-'I don't want to be a pioneer.' 'You're that,' I said, 'already, whether you want to be or not.' Then she said to me, with that dancing, impish look that her eyes and her lips and her white teeth used to manage between them-'All right! If I've got to be, I will. But I'll be a pioneer in my own way. I swear I'll shock the lot of you."

"Oho!" said Mr. Flood with exaggerated unction.

"Exactly!" Anita gave his agreement such eager welcome. "That put me on the qui-vive. Knowing her as I did, it was a very strong hint. I awaited developments. Frankly, I was prepared for a scandal, a romance, anything you please in the way of extravagance. That's why the Carey marriage, that tameness, upset me so. It was not what I was expecting. Really, I don't know which was more of a shock to me, The Resting-place or the marriage. Hardly had I recovered from the one when—"

"Oh, The Resting-place was the shock of my life too." He giggled. "I mourned, I assure you that I mourned over it. That opening, you know—'There was once'—And the end again—'So they were married and had children and lived happily ever after.' Pastiche! And then to be invited to wade through a conscientious account of how they achieved it! Too bad of Madala! As if the poor but virtuous artist's-model weren't a drug on the market already! And the impecunious artist himself—stooping, you know! Oh, I sat in ashes."

Miss Howe elapped her hands.

"Jasper, I love you. I do love you. Did she pull your leg too? Both legs? She did! She did! Oh, there's only one Madala!"

Mr. Flood's vanity was in his cheeks while she rattled on.

"Darling Jasper, I thought better of you! Can't you see the whole thing's a skit? Giving the jampot public what they wanted! Why, it's been out a year and they're sucking the spoon still. It's the resting-place! Ask the libraries! Oh, can't you see?"

"If it is parody," said Mr. Flood slowly, "then, I admit, it's unique."

"What else? You'll not deny humour to her?"

"I do!" the blonde lady nodded her head. "Once a woman is in love she's quite hopeless,"

"I don't see how parody could be in question," Anita broke in. "Anybody reading the book earefully must see that she's in earnest. That's the tragedy of it."

"The literary tragedy?"

- "Not only literary. The psychological value is enormous. It's not art, it's record. It's photography. That happened. That happened, tragically, to Madala. Oh, not the trimmings, of course, not the happy-ever-after. But to me it's perfectly clear that that lapse into Family Herald romance has had its equivalent in Madala's own life. I've always felt a certain weakness in her character, you know—a certain sentimentalism."
- "In the author of Eden Walls?" said Miss Howe contemptuously.
- "No, dear lady! But in the author of The Resting-place." Mr. Flood had recovered himself.
- "Skit, I tell you, skit!" she insisted. And they continued to bicker in undertones while Anita summed up the situation.
- "No, my theory is this-Madala Grey met some man-"
- "Carey?" asked Mr. Flood, dividing his allegiance.
- "No, Carey comes later. There was—an episode——"
 - "Episodes?" he amended.
- "Possibly. But an episode anyhow, that I place myself at the end of the Ploughed Fields period. It may have been later, it may have been the following summer while she was working at The Resting- place. I'm open to conviction there. But an episode there must have been. In The Resting-place she wrote it down as it ought to have happened."

"Why ought?"

"Well, obviously it didn't happen or she wouldn't have become Mrs. Carey."

"The gentleman loved and rode away, you mean?"

"Something of the sort. Something went wrong."

"I see." Miss Howe was interested. "It's a theory, anyhow. And then in sheer savage irony at her own weakness—"

"Not a bit. In sheer weak longing---"

"I see. If your theory is correct—I don't know what you base it on——"

"Internal evidence," said Anita airily.

"Then I can imagine that The Resting-place was a relief to write. Poor Madala!"

"And then," concluded Anita triumphantly, "then appears Carey, and she's too worn out, too exhausted with her own frustrated emotions to care what happens. The book's in her head still, and she her own heroine. He appears to her—I admit that it's possible that even Carey might appear to her—as a refuge, a resting-place."

"Yes, but you don't like Mr. Carey," said the Baxter girl. "But if Madala did? Isn't it possible that in Madala's eyes——? Why shouldn't the hero be Mr. Carey himself?"

Anita's eyes were bright with the cold anger that she always showed at the name.

"My good girl, you know nothing about John Carey, or you'd rule that out. Have you ever seen him? I thought not. And yet you have seen him. All day. Every day. When you talk of the man in the street, whom do you mean? What utterly common-place face is in your mind? Shall I tell you what is in mine? John Carey. Ordinary! Ordinary! The apotheosis of the uninspired! Oh, I haven't any words. Look for yourself." She rummaged furiously in the half-opened desk and flung out a fading snapshot on a mount. "There he is! That's the thing she married!"

"What's he doing in your holy of holies?" Mr. Flood's eyes seemed to bore into her desk.

Anita, still thrusting down the overflowing papers, answered coldly—

"Madala sent it to Mother. She said that it wasn't good enough but that it would give her an idea."

"It certainly gives one an idea," said the blonde lady languorously.

"And then she put in a post-script that it didn't do him justice because the sun was in his eyes. Defiantly, as it were. Isn't that significant? She'd never own to a mistake. Pride! She had the devil's own pride. Look at the way she took her reviews! And in this case she would be bound to defend him. She'd defend anything she'd once taken under her wing."

"Well, you know," drawled the blonde lady, her eyes on the photograph, "according to this he topped her by two inches. I don't somehow see him under Madala's wing." And then—"After all, there's something rather fascinating in bone and muscle."

"Yes, and I don't see," the Baxter girl hurried into defiance, "honestly I don't see, Miss Serle, why she shouldn't have been in love with him. Of course, it's not a elever face, but it's good-tempered, and it's good-looking, and there's a twinkle. Madala loved a twinkle. And I don't see——"

Anita crushed her.

"We're discussing the standards of Madala Grey."

"That's not the point either, Anita." Mr. Flood would sometimes rouse himself to defend the Baxter girl. "You know something. You own to it. What do you know?"

"Simply that she was in love with someone else. I've papers that prove it. Now it was either some man whom none of us know, whom for some reason she wouldn't let us know, or——' she hesitated. Then she began again—"Mind you, I don't commit myself, but—has the likeness never struck you? Hugh Barrington in The Resting-place and——?" Her eyes flickered towards Kent Rehan.

Mr. Flood whistled.

"Be careful, Anita."

"He?" Miss Howe laughed, but kindly. "He's lost to the world. He'll be worse than ever now."

"There!" Anita dropped upon the sentence like a hawk upon a heather bird. "You see! You say that! And yet you tell me there was nothing—nothing—between them? Didn't she rave about him? his talents? his personality? his charm? And then she goes and writes the story of an artist's-model!"

Miss Howe laughed again.

"When a thing's as obvious as that, it probably isn't so. Besides, the artist's-model marries the artist."

"Exactly. She leaves them, and us, cloyed with love in a cottage. I repeat, the artist's-model marries the artist because Madala Grey didn't. It's the merest shadow of a solution as yet, but—isn't that a living portrait in The Resting-place? Oh, I know it by heart——

"Maybe it was his height that gave you the impression, less of weakness than of vagueness, as if his high forehead touched cloud-land, and were obscured by dreams; for his cold eyes guarded his mind from you, and his dark beard hid his mouth."

"You do know it by heart!" said Miss Howe.

"Of course I know it by heart. It was the first clue. Can anybody read those lines without recognizing him?"

The Baxter girl persisted-

"But I don't see it. Oh, of course it is like him but because she borrowed his face, the story needn't be about him. Why couldn't she just imagine the story? If she was a genius?"

"That remains the point," said Mr. Flood.

"She was," insisted Anita stubbornly.

Miss Howe smiled and said nothing.

He continued-

"The mere fact that she was a genius would prevent such a descent into milk and sugar, unless she were money-making or love-sick."

The blonde lady spoke-

"Just so! Love-sick—sick of love—savage with love—savaging her holy of holies. A parody. Lila's right."

But Miss Howe shook her head.

"No, no. I didn't mean that sort of parody. Madala may have had her emotions, but she'd always be good-tempered about them. She's laughing at herself in The Resting-place as well as at us."

"But why do you cavil at it so?" said the Baxter girl slowly.

"Only at its plain meaning. Grant the parody and——"

"But why can't you just read it as it stands? Why do you say sentimental? I—I liked it."

Anita took the book from her hand.

"But, my dear child, anybody can write this sort of thing. Where's the passage the ladies' papers rave about, where they have a day on the river together?" She whipped over the pages while I said to the Baxter girl—

"What is it? What's it about? What's the plot?"

"Oh, there isn't any. That's what they complain of. It's just a little artist's-model who sits to an elderly, broken-down dreamer, and thinks him a god. The duke and door-mat touch. It's just how two people fall in love and find it out. It's as simple as A.B.C. But people ate it when it came out."

"Treacle, I tell you," insisted Mr. Flood. Anita overheard him.

"Exactly! Listen to this-

. . . and they landed at last in a meadow of brilliant, brook-fed grass.

She had no words in which to say a thousand times 'How beautiful!' Words? She had never known a country June. She had never seen whole hedges clotted with bloom, she had never in all her life breathed the perfume of the may or heard a lark's ecstasy. She had never—and to her simplicity there was no break in the chain of thought—she had never before been alone with him, unpaid, not his servant but his equal and companion. How should she have words?

She sat in the grass with the tall ox-eyes nodding at her elbow and looked at him from under her hat with a little eased sigh. This, after the dust of the journey, of the day, of her life, was bliss. She prepared herself for this bliss, deliberately, as she did everything. She was too poor and too hungry to be wasteful of her happiness: she must have every crumb. Therefore she had looked first at herself, critically, with her trained eye, fingering the frill of her blouse, flinging a scatter of skirt across her dusty eity feet, lest her poverty should jar his thoughts of her.

Then she looked at him. She saw him for a moment with undazzled eyes, the blue sky enriched with clouds behind him. She was saying to herself—'I'm not a fool. I can see straight. I know what he is. He's just an ordinary man in a hot, black suit. He stoops, I suppose. He's worn out with work. He'll never be young again. And there's nothing particular about him. Then what makes me like him? But I do. I do. He has only to turn and smile at me—'

Then he turned and smiled at her, and it seemed to her that the glamour of the gilded day passed over and into him as he smiled, glorifying him so that she caught her breath at his beauty. She knew her happiness. She knew herself and him. He was the sum of the blue sky and green, green grass, and the shining waters and the flowers with their sweet smell, and the singing birds and the hum of the little things of the air. All beauty was summed up in him: he was food to her and sunshine and music: he was her absolute good: and she thought that someone ought to see that his socks were mended properly, for there was a great ladder down one ankle, darned with wrong-coloured wool.

[&]quot;Well?" She shut the book.

[&]quot;I like it," said the Baxter girl stubbornly.

Mr. Flood twisted uneasily in his seat.

[&]quot;Oh, pretty, of course. Of course it's pleasant enough in a way. But Madala oughtn't to be pretty. Think of the stuff she can do."

[&]quot;But can't you see," Miss Howe broke in, "how it parodies the slush and sugar school?"

Anita shook her head.

"She used another manner when she was ironical. I wish you were right. Oh, you may be—I must consider—but I'm afraid that she is in carnest. That phrase now—'The green, green grass,' (why double the adjective?) 'the shining waters, the singing birds'—pitiful! And that anti-climax—'He was her absolute good: and she thought that someone ought to see that his socks were mended properly.' I ask you—is it art?"

"Not as serious work, of course," said Miss Howe, "but---"

"I wish I could think so," said Anita.

"Well, I wish I could do it," said the Baxter girl. "What do you say, Jenny?"

But it had brought back the country to me. It had brought back home. I hadn't anything to say to them.

"And she wouldn't discuss it, you know. She came in after supper that night, just as I was reading the last chapter. It had only been out a day. There she sat, where you are now, Lila, smiling, with her hands in her lap and her eyes fixed on her hands, waiting for me to finish."

"Oh—" Miss Howe gave a little gushing scream, "that reminds me—d'you know, Anita, somebody actually told me that nobody had seen The Resting-place before it was published, not even you. I was amused. I denied it, of course."

"Why?" said Anita coldly.

Miss Howe screamed again.

"Then you didn't? Oh, my dear?"

"Emancipation with a vengeance," said Mr. Flood.

"It had to come, Anita," said Miss Howe with deadly sympathy.

"It was not that. It was only—she was so extraordinarily sensitive about The Resting-place—unlike herself altogether. I think, I've always thought that she herself knew how unworthy it was of her. She—what's the use of disguising it?—she, at least, had a value for my judgment," her eyes, wandering past Miss Howe, brooded upon the Baxter girl, "and she knew what my judgment would be. She owned it. She anticipated it. I had shut the book, you know, quietly. She sat so still that I thought she was asleep. She had had one of those insanc mornings—"

"Of course. She used to take a crowd of children into the country, didn't she?"

"Once a week. Slum children."

"I know. 'To eat buttercups,' she told me," said Miss Howe.

"It was ridiculous, you know. She couldn't afford it. Look at the way she lived! I always said to her, 'If you can afford mad extravagances of that sort, you can afford a decent flat in a decent neighbourhood'——'

"Oh, but I loved those rooms," said the Baxter girl, "with the Spanish leather screen round the wash-hand-stand."

Anita glanced behind her.

"Ah, you've noticed? I happened to admire it one day and—you know what she is—'Would you like it? Why, of course, it would just suit the rest of your things. Oh, you must have it. I'd like you to. It's far too big for this room.' 'Oh,' I said, 'if you want it housed——'So that's how it comes to be here. One couldn't hurt her feelings. And you know, it was quite unsuitable to lodging-house furniture."

Miss Howe laughed.

"It disguised the wash-hand-stand. That was all Madala cared. Only then she always took you round to show you how beautifully it did disguise it."

"Typical," said Mr. Flood. "Her reserves were topsy-turvy."

"But she had her reserves," said Miss Howe quickly.

"I doubt that," he answered her.

"Oh, but she had." Anita recovered her place in the talk. "Curious reserves. You know how she came to me over Eden Walls and Ploughed Fields. I saw every chapter. But as I was telling you, she wouldn't hear a criticism of The Resting-place. That evening she pounced on me. She was as quick as light. She said—'You don't like it! I knew you wouldn't! Never mind, Anita. Forget it! Put it in the fire! You like me. What do the books matter?' She'd been watching me all the time."

"She had eyes in the back of her head," said Miss Howe.

"Kind eyes," said the Baxter girl.

"And I assure you she wouldn't have said another word on the subject if I hadn't insisted. I told her not to be ridiculous. How could I help being disappointed? How could I separate her from her work? I was disappointed, bitterly. I made it clear. I said to her—'Well, Madala, all I can say is that if your future output is to be on a level with this—this pot-boiler—''

"It's not a pot-boiler," said the Baxter girl loudly and quite rudely. "I don't know exactly what it is, but it's not a pot-boiler."

Anita stared her down.

"'-pot-boiler,' I said, 'then—I wash my hands of you.' I wanted to rouse her. I couldn't understand her."

"Well?" said Miss Howe.

They all laughed.

"Oh, you can guess." Anita was petulant, but she, too, laughed a little. "You know her way. She just sat smiling and twisting a ring that she wore and looking like a scolded child."

"But what did she say?" said the Baxter girl.

"Nothing to the point. 'Oh,' she said, 'but Anita, if I'd never written anything, wouldn't you be just as fond of me?' Such a silly thing to say! She was distressing at times. She embarrassed me. Fond of her! She knew my interests were intellectual. Fond of her! For a woman of her brains her standard of values was childish."

"But you were fond of her, you know," said Miss Howe.

"Oh, as for that—there was something about her—she had a certain way— After all, if it gave her pleasure to be demonstrative, it was easier to acquiesce. But she made a fetish of such things. I was only trying to explain to her, as I tell you, that it was quite impossible to separate creator and creatures, and that to me she was Eden Walls and Ploughed Fields, and if you believe me, she was upon me like a whirlwind, shaking me by the shoulders, and erying out-'No, no, stop! You're to stop! It's me you like, not the books. I hate them. I hate all that. I shall get away from all that one day.' And I said--'I don't wonder vou're ashamed of The Resting-place. I advise you to get to work at once on your new book. You'll find that if you pull yourself together---' And all she said was - 'Nita! Nita! Don't!' And she looked at me in such a curious way---'

"How?" somebody said.

"I don't know—laughing—despairing. She'd no right to look at me like that. It was I who was in despair."

"I'd like to have seen you two," said Miss Howe.

"I didn't know what had got into her. Of course I blame myself. I ought to have followed it out.

I might have prevented things. But I was annoyed and she saw it, and she——"

Miss Howe twinkled.

"She wouldn't let you be annoyed with her long. What did she do with you, Anita?"

"She? I don't know what you mean. We changed the subject. And as a matter of fact I was much occupied at the time with the Anthology." She paused. "She had excellent taste," said Anita regretfully. "Naturally I reserved to myself the final decision, but—"

"Just so," said Mr. Flood.

"Be quiet, Jasper." The blonde lady's draperies dusted his shoulder intimately.

"She'd brought me a delieious thing of Lady Nairn's, I remember, that I'd overlooked. And from talking of the Anthology we came, somehow, to talking about me. Yes-" Anita gave an embarrassed half laugh—"She began to talk to me, turning the tables as it were—about myself. She'd never, in all the years I'd known her, taken such a tone. Astonishing! As if—as if I were the younger." She stared at them, as one combating an unuttered criticism. "I-liked it," said Anita defiantly. "There was nothing impertinent. was heartening. She made me feel that one person in the world, at least, knew me-knew my work. I realized, suddenly, that while I had been studying her, she must have been studying me, that she understood my eapacities, my limitations, my possibilities, almost as well as I did myself. The relief of it—indescribable! She was extraordinarily plain-spoken. As a rule, you know, I thought her manner——"

"Insincere?" said the Baxter girl. "Yes, I've heard people say that."

"It had that effect. It didn't seem possible that she eould like everyone as much as she made them think she did. But with me, at least, she was always frankness itself. She believes, you know,-she believed, that is, that all my work so far, even the Anthology and the Famous Women series, not to mention the lighter work, is still preliminary: that my-" she hesitated-" my master-piece, she called it, was still to come. She said that, though she appreciated all my work, I hadn't 'found myself.' Yes! from that child to me it was amusing. But right, you know. She said that my line, whether I dealt with a period or a person, would always be critical, but that I'd never had a big success because so far I'd been merely critical: that I'd never become identified with my subject: that I'd always remained aloof-inhuman. Yes, she said that, A curious theory—but it interested me. But she said that it was only the real theme I needed, the engrossing subject. She said that my chance would come: that 'she felt it in her bones.' I can hear her voice now-'Don't you worry, Nita! It'll come to you one day. A big thing. Biography, I shouldn't wonder. And I shall sit and say -- I told you so—I told you so!' Yes, she talked like that. Oh, it's nothing when I repeat it, but if you knew how it seemed to pour new life into me. It was the belief in her voice!"

"She always believed in you," said Miss Howe with a certain harshness. "Insincere! You should have heard her talk of your Famous Women!" And then—"Yes. She believed in you right enough."

"More than I did in her that night. I couldn't forget The Resting-place. It lay on the table, and every now and then, when I felt most comfort in her, my eyes would fall on it, and it would jar me. She felt it too. When I saw her off at last—it had grown very late-she stopped at the gate and turned and came running back. I thought that she had forgotten her handbag. She nearly always forgot her handbag. But no, it was The Restingplace that was on her mind. It was-'Nita! try it again. Mavbe you'd like it better.' And then-'Nita! I enjoyed writing it so.' 'That's something, at any rate,' I said, not wanting, you know, to be unkind. Then she said-'I wish you liked it. Because, you know, Nita—' and stopped as if she wanted to tell me something and couldn't make up her mind. 'Well, what?' I said. It was cold on the steps. She hesitated. She looked at me. For an instant I had an absurd impression that she was going to ery. Then she kissed me. She'd kissed me good-night once already, though, you know, we never did as a rule. And then, off she went without another word. I was quite bewildered by her. I nearly ealled her back; but it was one of those deep dark blue nights: it seemed to swallow her up at once. But I heard her footsteps for a long while after—dragging steps, as if she were tired. I wasn't. It was as if she had put something into me. I went back into the house and I worked till daylight. And all the next day I worked—worked well. I felt, I remember, so hopeful, so full of power. By the evening I had quite a mass of material to show her, if she came. I half expected her to come. But instead—" she fumbled among her papers—" I got this."

It was a sheet of note-paper, a sheet that looked as if it had been crushed into a ball and then smoothed out again for careful folding. Anita's fingers were still ironing out the crinkled edge while she read it aloud.

"I want to tell you something. I tried to tell you yesterday, but somehow I couldn't. It oughtn't to be difficult, yet all this afternoon I've been writing to you in an exercise book, and crossing out, and re-phrasing, and putting in again as carefully and dissatisfiedly as if it were Opus 4. I wish it were, because then you'd be very much pleased with Madala Grey and forget the dreadful shock of Opus 3! I was always afraid you wouldn't like it, and sorry, because I like it more than all my other work put together. Have you never even begun to guess why? But how should you, when I didn't know myself until after it was finished? Coming events, I suppose. It's quite true—one isn't overtaken by fate: one prepares one's own fate: one carries it about inside one, like a child. I hear you say—'Can't you come to the point?' No, I can't. Partly because I'm afraid of what you'll say, because I'm afraid you'll be disappointed, and partly, selfishly, because there is a queer pleasure in beating about the bush that bears my flower. It's too beautiful to pick straight away in one rough snatch of a sentence. Am I selfish? You've been so kind to me. I know you will be sorry and that troubles me. And yet—Anita, I am going to be married. You met him once in the churchyard at home, do you remember? I've seen him now and then when I took the children down there in the summer. He—

There's something scratched out here," said Anita.

"I think we shall be happy. When you get accustomed to the idea I hope you will like him."

She paused.

"Now what do you make of that?" said Anita.

"It explains the expeditions with the children," said Mr. Flood. "They were always too—philanthropic, to be quite—ch?"

"Oh, but she began those outings ages ago," said Miss Howe quickly.

"Besides," said Anita, "she didn't go every week that summer. That's the point. She told me herself that she was so busy that she had to get help—one of those mission women. Now why was she so busy?"

"Diversions in the country and attractions in town?" said Mr. Flood. "It all takes time."

Anita nodded.

"You think that? So do I. And attractions in town! Exactly! At any rate I shall make that the big chapter, the convincing chapter, of the Life. I think I shall be able to prove that that summer was the climax of her affairs. I grant you that she met Carey that summer, but as she says herself, a few times only. We must look nearer home than Carey."

"Oh, but there's such a thing as love at first sight," protested the Baxter girl, and Anita dealt with her in swift parenthesis—

"I was there when they first met. Shouldn't I have realized——?" And then, continuing—"Well, reckon up my points. To begin with—the difference in her that we all noticed, the restlessness, the—unhappiness one might almost say, the aloofness—oh, don't you know what I mean? as if she didn't belong to us any more."

"As if she didn't belong to herself any more."

"Yes, yes, that's even more what I mean. Then comes the fact that we saw so little of her. What did she do with her time? Writing The Restingplace, was her explanation, but—is that gospel? Do you really believe that she sat at home writing and dreaming all those long summer days and nights, except when she was—eating buttercups—with Carey and her chaperons? And then comes The Resting-place with its appalling falling-off, and following on that, this letter, this sudden engagement. Now doesn't it look—I ask you, doesn't it look as if something had been going on behind all our backs and had at last come to a head?"

"Oh, that she was in love is certain," said Mr. Flood. "Was there ever a woman of genius who wasn't?"

"Exactly. It's a moral certainty. And this letter to me proves that, whoever it was, it wasn't Carey. 'I think we shall be happy.' 'I hope you will like him.' Is that the way a woman writes of her first love or her first lover?"

"Oh, but that sentence just before—" the Baxter girl stretched out her hand for the letter—" The bush that bears my flower—"." She spoke sympathetically; but it jarred me. I wondered how I should feel if I thought that the Baxter girl would ever read my letters aloud.

"Ah, that's the literary touch. Madala could never resist embroideries. Besides—she wants to confuse me. That means nothing. But here, you see——" she took the letter out of the Baxter girl's hand—" as soon as she comes to the point, the real point, the confession, the apologia—then the baldest sentences. Try to remember that Madala Grey has written one of the strongest love seenes of the decade, and all she can say of the man she is to marry is—'I hope you will like him.'"

"Hm! It's curious!" Miss Howe was frowning.
"Isn't it? And then you know, the whole manner of the engagement was so unlike her usual triumphant way. She always swept one along, didn't she? But in the matter of the marriage she seems, as far as I can make out, to have been perfectly passive. She left everything to the man—arrangements—furniture—I imagine she even bought her clothes to please him. And the wedding itself—no reception, no presents, no notice to anyone, so sudden, so private. Not a word even to her oldest friends——"

Great-aunt stirred in her corner.

"—there was something so furtive about it all: as if she were running away from something."

Miss Howe sat up.

"D'you mean?—what do you mean, Anita? Are you hinting——?"

Anita looked at her in a puzzled way that relieved me, I hardly knew why.

- "Why, only that it carries out my theory—of Carey as a refuge."
 - "From what?"
- "Life frustration what did you think I meant?"
- "I don't know. Nothing. It was my evil mind, I suppose." She flushed.
- "How she harps on the child!" the Baxter girl carried it on.
- "That's a mere simile——" said Miss Howe swiftly.
 - "But a queer simile!"
 - "The marriage was sudden," said Mr. Flood from the floor in his silky voice. "Anita's theory has its points."

"A seven months' child!" It was the first word that the blonde lady had said for some time. There was something sluggishly cold, slimily cold, in her abstracted voice.

Anita started.

"I never suggested that," she said sharply. But there was a quiver in her voice that was more excitement than anger.

"My dear lady, nobody suggests anything. We are only remarking that the union of our Madala and her 'refuge'—the soubriquet is yours, by the way—was as surprising as it was—er—sudden. That was your idea?" He turned to the shadows and from them the blonde lady nodded, smiling.

At the time, you know, I didn't understand them. They were so quick and allusive. They said more in jerks and nods and pauses than in actual speech. But I saw the smile on that woman's face, and heard the way he said 'our Madala.' I felt myself growing angry and panic-stricken, and I was quite helpless. I just went across the room to that big man sitting dully in his corner, in his dream, and I caught his arm and cried to him under my breath—

"You must come. You must come and stop them. They're talking about her. Come quickly. They—they're saying beastly things."

He gave me one look. Then he got up and went swiftly from one room to the other. But swiftly as he moved and I followed, someone else was there before us to fight that battle.

It was Great-aunt Serle.

She was a heavy old woman and feeble. She never stirred as a rule without a helping arm; but somehow she had got herself out of her seat and across the floor to the table, and there she stood, her knitting gripped as if it were a weapon, the long thread of it stretched and taut from the ball that had rolled round the chair-leg, her free hand and her tremulous head jerking and snapping and poking at that amazed assembly as she rated them—

"I won't allow such talk. Anita, I won't have it. If I let you bring home friends—ought to know better! And you——" the blonde lady was spitted, as it were, on that uncring finger, "you're a wicked woman. That's what you are—a wicked, scandalous woman. And you, Anita, ought to be ashamed of yourself, to let her talk so of my girl. Such a woman! Paint and powder! Envy, hatred, malice! And in my house too! Tell her to wash her face!" She glowered at them.

There was a blank pause and then a sound somewhere, like the end of a spurting giggle. It must have been the Baxter girl. There was a most uncomfortable moment, before Anita cried out "Mother!" in a horrified voice, and Miss Howe said "Beryl!" in a voice not quite as horrified.

But the blonde lady sat through it all quite ealmly, smiling and moistening her lips. At last she drawled out—

"Nita! Your dear mother's quite upset. So sorry, Nita!" Then, a very little lower, but we could all hear it—"Poor dear Nita! Quite a trial for poor dear Nita!"

But Anita had jumped up. She was very much flustered and annoyed. I think, too, that she was startled. I know that I was startled. Great-aunt didn't look like herself. She was like a witch in a picture-book, and her voice had been quite strong and commanding.

Anita tried to quiet her and get her away.

"Mother! You must be quiet! D'you hear me, Mother? You don't know what you're saying. You've been up too long. You're overdone. It's time you went to bed."

She took her firmly by the arm. But Great-aunt struggled with her.

"I won't. Leave me alone. It's your fault, Anita. You sat and listened. You let them talk that way about my girl."

"Now, Mother, what nonsense! Your girl! Madala's not your daughter." And then, in apology—"She's always confusing us. She gets these ideas."

"Not mine? Ah! That's all you know! 'Anita upstairs?' That's how she'd come running in to me. 'Are you busy, Mrs. Serle?' Always looked in to my room first. Brought me violets.

Talked. Told me all her troubles. You never knew. Not mine, eh? Didn't I see her married, my pretty girl? 'Hole-and-eorner business!' That's what you tell them? 'Nobody knew.' But I knew."

Anita's hand dropped from her mother's arm. She stared at her.

"You, Mother? You there?" And then, angrily, "Oh, I don't believe it."

"Don't believe it, eh? But it's true, for all I'm lumber in my own house. I'm to go to bed before the company comes, before she comes. Don't she want to see me then? Who pinned her veil for her and kissed her and blessed her, and took her to church, and gave her to him? Not you, my daughter. She didn't come to you for that." And then, with a slacking and a wail, "Eh, but we were never to tell!"

"Mother, you'd better come to bed. I——" there was the faintest suggestion of menace in her voice—" I'll talk to you tomorrow."

The old woman shrank away.

"I won't come. I know. You want me out of the way. You don't want me to see her. What are you going to say about me? You'll say things to her about me. I've heard you."

Quite obviously Anita restrained herself.

"Now, Mother, you know you don't mean that."
"Hush!" Great-aunt pulled away her hand.

"Quiet, child, quiet! Wasn't that the cab? I've listened all the evening, all the long evening." Her old voice thinned and sharpened to a chirp. "Soft, soft, the wheels go by. The wheels never stop. Wait till the wheels stop. It's the fog that's keeping her. There's fog everywhere. Maybe she's lost in the fog." Then she chuckled to herself. "Naughty girl to be so late. But she's always late. Why should I go to bed? I've got to finish my knitting, Nita. Only two rows, Nita. They'll just last me till she comes." And then, "Anita, she will come?"

T.

Anita turned to the others.

"Don't be alarmed. It's nothing. I'm afraid she hasn't realized——" She began again—"Now, Mother! It's bed-time, Mother dear."

"'Dear'—'dear'—why do you speak kindly? Madala's not here to listen." And then—"Nita, Nita child, let me stay till she comes."

Anita was quite patient with her, and quite unyielding.

"Now listen, Mother! It's no use waiting. Come upstairs with me. She won't——" her voice altered, "she can't come tonight."

Beside me Kent Rehan spoke-

"I can't stand it," he said. "I can't stand it. I can't stand it." He didn't seem to know that he was speaking.

But Great-aunt heard his voice if she didn't hear the words. She broke away from Anita and went shuflling over the floor towards him with blind movements. She would have fallen if he hadn't been beside her in an instant, holding her.

"Kent, d'you hear her? You know my daughter. You know Madala too. You speak to her! You tell her! Madala always comes, doesn't she? always comes. You tell her that! I want to see Madala. Very good to me, Madala. Brought me a bunch of violets."

Anita followed.

"Kent, for goodness' sake, try to help me. She'll make herself ill. I shall have her in bed for days. Now, Mother——Now come, Mother!"

Great-aunt elung to his arm.

"She's not kind. My daughter's very hard on me."

For the first time Anita showed signs of agitation. She was almost appealing.

"Kent! You mustn't believe her. It's not fair. You see my position. One has to be firm. And you don't know how trying—— What am I to do? Shall I tell her? She's as obstinate—I'll never get her to bed. Ought I to tell her? She'll have to be told sooner or later. She'll have to realize——"

He said—

"I'll talk to her if you like."

Anita looked at him intently.

"It's good of you. She has always listened to you. Since you and I were children together. Do you remember, Kent? Yes, you talk to her."

"What's she saying?" demanded Great-aunt. Her old eyes were bright with suspicion. "Talking you over, ch? Talk anyone over, my daughter will—my clever daughter. So clever. Madala thinks so too. 'Dripping with brains.' That's what Madala said. Made me laugh. Quite true, though. Hasn't Madala come yet?"

"Now, look here, Mrs. Serle——" he put his arm round her bent shoulders, "it's very foggy, you know, and it's very late. Nobody could travel—nobody could come tonight. You'll believe us, won't you?"

"Wait! What's that?" She stood a moment, her finger raised, listening intently. Then she straightened her bowed body and looked up at him. One so seldom saw her face lifted, shone upon by any light, that that alone, I suppose, was enough to change her. For changed she was—her countenance so wise and beaming that I hardly knew her. "Now I know," she said, "she will come. Wait for her, Kent. She will come. I—I hear her coming. She's not so far from us. She's not so far away."

They stared at each other for a moment, the man and the old woman. Then her face dropped forward again, downward into its accustomed shadow, as he said to her—

"It's too late, Mrs. Serle. She won't come—now. Not now any more. And Anita thinks—truly you're very tired, aren't you? Now aren't you?"
"Your time!" she are your!

"I know you are. Won't you let me help you upstairs?"

"And stay a bit?" she said, clutching at him. "Stay and talk to me?"

"Yes, yes," he humoured her.

"About Madala?"

He was very white.

"About Madala. Anita, take her other arm. That's the way."

They helped her out of the room, and we heard their slow progress up the stairs.

It was the blonde lady who broke the silence with her tinkling laugh—

"Poor dear Nita!"

"Kent's a good sort," said Miss Howe.

"What's Heeuba to him now?" Mr. Flood's smile glinted from one to another.

"A very old friend," said the blonde lady. "You heard what dear Nita said to him."

"'Children together!' I didn't know that." He was still smiling.

"And they always kept in touch," put in Miss Howe.

"Trust Nita for that," said the blonde lady.

Miss Howe nodded.

"She told me once that from the first she realized that he would do big things."

"So Nita kept in touch!" Mr. Flood laughed outright.

"But it's only the last few years that she's been able to produce him at will, like a conjuror's rabbit."

"Since Madala's advent, you mean," said the blonde lady.

"' Will you walk into my parlour,' said Anita to the fly. 'It's a literary parlour—'" murmured Mr. Flood. And then—" No. Kent's not likely to have walked in without a honey-pot in the parlour. Madala must have been useful."

"That's what Miss Serle will never forgive her, I think," said the Baxter girl.

"What?"

"That she was useful. Do you believe in the other man?"

"The unknown influence?" His eyes narrowed. "Hm!"

"And yet of course there's been someone." The Baxter girl never quite deserted Anita, even in her absence.

The blonde lady nodded.

"Of course. Nita's always nearly right. The influence—the adventures—the mariage de convenance—she's got it all so pat—and the man too. She knows well enough; yet she fights against it. She won't have it. I wonder why. 'Very old friends' I suppose." She laughed again. "But of course it was Kent. Can't you see that's why Nita hates her? What a Life it will be! I just long for it to come out. Nita's a comedy."

"A tragedy."

"Nita? My dear Lila! What do you mean?"
"I'm only quoting," said Miss Howe. And then—"But when she isn't actually annoying me
I think I agree."

"Who said it?" said the Baxter girl inquisitively.

"Madala. It's the only thing I've ever heard her say of Anita. She never discussed Anita. Now of Kent she would talk by the hour. Which proves to me, you know, that the affair with him didn't go very deep. Nita quoted that description of Kent just now, but only so far as it served her. She earefully forgot how it goes on. Here, where is it? Ah——

He brooded like a lover over his colour-box, and as she watched him her thoughts flew to her own small brothers at home. Geoff with his steam-engine, Jimmy sorting stamps—there, there was to be found the same ruthlessness of absorption, achieving dignity by its sheer intensity. She smiled over him and them.

"Keep your face still," he ordered.

She obeyed instantly, flushing; and as she did so she thought to herself—'I could be afraid of that man,' but a moment afterwards—'He is like a small boy.'

"Now that may be Kent—oh, it is Kent, of course—but it's not Madala's attitude to Kent. She was not in the least afraid of him."

"Ah, but that later passage, the country passage—that's pure Madala."

"Yes. Just where it ceases to be Kent—'He stoops, I suppose. He's worn out with work. He's quite ordinary.' That's not Kent."

"No, that's true. One doesn't know where to have her. She muddles her trail," said Mr. Flood.

"I eall it weakness of touch not to let you know whom she drew from," said the Baxter girl.

"Ah, but she always insisted that she didn't draw portraits."

"Of course. They always do. If one believed them one would never get behind the scenes, and if one can't get behind the scenes one might as well be mere public and read for the story," said the Baxter girl indignantly.

"Well, you know," Miss Howe sat turning over the pages of The Resting-place with eareful, almost with earessing fingers, "I don't believe she meant to draw portraits. She had queer, old-fashioned notions. I think she would have thought it treacherous."

"The portraits are there though, if you look close enough," insisted the Baxter girl.

"Yes, but they happened in spite of her. Anyone she was fond of she took into her, in a sense: and when her gift descended upon her and demanded expression, then, all unconsciously, she expressed them too. But gilded! We find ourselves in her books, and we never knew before how lovable we are. You're right, Blanche. she liked whate'er she looked on. And you're right too, Jasper, Grande amoureuse, she was that. That capacity for loving made her what she was. The technical facility was her talent and her luck; but it was her own personality that turned it into genius."

"Then after all you admit the genius," said the Baxter girl triumphantly.

"No. No. No. My judgment says no. When I read her books in cold blood—no. But we've been talking about her. It's as if she were with us, and when she's with us my judgment goes! That's the secret of Madala Grey. She does what she likes with us. But the next generation, the people who don't know her, whether they'll find in her books what we do, is doubtful. Who wants a dried rose?"

"Yes, but Miss Serle—in the Life? Won't she -preserve her?"

"Preserve—exactly! But not revive. No, I'd sooner pin my faith to The Spring Song, although I haven't seen it. It ought to be a revelation. She eluded Nita, impishly. I've seen her do it. But there's no doubt that she gave Kent his chance."

"Every chance. She'd deny it, I suppose."

"Oh, she did." Miss Howe laughed. "Have you ever seen her in a temper? I have. I was a fool. I told her one day (you know how things eome up) just something of the gossip about Kent and her. I thought it only kind. But you should have heard her. She was as healthily furious as a schoolgirl. That was so comfortable about Madala. She hadn't that terrible aloofness of really big people. She didn't withdraw into dignity. She just stormed." Miss Howe laughed again. "I can see her now, raging up and down the room-'Do you mean to say that people-? I never heard of anything so monstrous! What has it got to do with them? Why can't they leave me alone? I've never done them any harm. I wouldn't have believed it, pretending they liked me, and letting me be friends with them, and then saying hateful things behind my back. I'll never speak to them again-never! That they should go about twisting things-Why can't they mind their own business? And dragging in Kent like that! Oh, it does make me so wild!' 'Oh, well, my dear,' I said to her, 'when two people see as much of each other as you and Kent do, there's bound to be talk.' At that she swung round on me. 'But he's my friend,' she said. 'Yes,' I said, 'that's just it.' 'But I'm not expected to marry everyone I'm fond of!' 'Are you fond of him, Madala?' I asked her, 'Yes,' she said directly, 'I am, I'm awfully fond of him. I'd do anything for him, bless his heart!' 'Well,' I said, 'vou needn't be so upset. That's all that people mean. If you're fond of him and he-he's obviously in love with you--' But at that she eaught me up in her quick way-'In love? Oh, you don't understand him. Nobody understands Kent. He doesn't understand himself. Dear old Kent!' Then she began walking up and down the room again, but more quietly, and talking, half to herself, as if she had forgotten I was there, justifying herself, justifying him. 'Dear old Kent! Poor old Kent! I'm awfully fond of Kent. So is he of me. But not in the right way. He's got, when he happens to think of it, a great romantic idea of the woman he wants, of the wife he wants; but the truth is, you know, that he doesn't want a wife. He wants a mother, and a sister, and a-a lover. A true lover. A patienter woman than I am. A woman who'll delight in him for his own sake, not for what he gives her. A woman who'll put him first and be content to come second with him. He'll always put his work first. He can't help it. He's an artist. Oh, not content. I didn't mean that. She must be too big for that-big enough to know what she misses. But a wise woman, such a loving, hungry woman. 'Half a loaf,' she'll say to herself. But she'll never have to let him hear. He's chivalrous. He'd be horrified at giving her half a loaf. He'd say-'All or nothing!' But he couldn't give her all. He couldn't spare it. So he'd give her nothing out of sheer respect for her. That's Kent. He's got his dear queer theories of life-oh, they're all right as theories—but he fits people to them, instead of them to people. Procrustes. He'd torture a woman from the kindest of motives. It's lack of imagination. Haven't you noticed?' 'Considering he's one of the great imaginative artists of the day, Madala,' I said to her, 'that's rather sweeping.' 'But that's why,' she said. 'It's just because he's a genius. He lives on himself, in himself. Kent's an island.' I said-'No chance of a bridge, Madala?' She shook her head. 'Not my job.' I said I was sorry. I was, too. It would have been so ideal, that pair. I wanted to argue it with her; but she wouldn't listen. She said—'If I weren't an artist too, then maybe-maybe. I'm very fond of Kent. But no-I'd want too much. But, you know, there's a woman somewhere, rather like me -I hope he'll marry her. I'd love her. She'd never be jealous of me. She'd understand. She's me without the writing, without the outlet. She'll pour it all into loving him. I hope she's alive somewhere. He'd be awfully happy. And if he had children-that's what he needs. I can just see him with children. But not my children. If I married—,' And then she flushed up to the eves in that way she had, as if she were fifteen. 'I-I'd like to be married for myself, for my faults, for the bits I don't tell anyone. Kent would hate my faults. I'd have to hide my realest self.' She stood staring out of the window. Then she said, still in that rueful, childish voice—'I would like to be liked.' 'But, my dear girl,' said I, 'what nonsense you talk! If ever a woman had friends---' She flung round at me again—'If I'd not written Eden Walls would Anita have looked at me-or any of you?' I said-'That's not a fair question. Your books are you, the quintessence, the very best of vou.' 'But the rest of me?' she said, 'but the rest of me?' I laughed at her. 'Well, what about the rest of you?' Then she said, in a small voice—'It feels rather out of it sometimes, Lila.'"

"I say," Mr. Flood twinkled at her, "are you going to present all this to Anita? She'd be grateful."

"Not she," said Miss Howe sharply. "Too much fact would spoil her theory. Let her spin her own web."

"Agreed. There's room for more than one biography, eh?" They laughed together a little consciously.

"You know," the blonde lady recalled them, "she must have been quite a good actress. She always seemed perfectly contented."

"Imagine Madala Grey discontented," said the Baxter girl. "How could she be?"

"Oh, Kent was at the root of that," said Miss Howe, "for all her talk."

Mr. Flood nodded.

"Yes, the lady did protest too much, if your report's correct."

"It's the only explanation and, as you said, Blanche, in her heart Anita knows it. After all, he's a somebody. Madala wouldn't be the only one who's found him attractive, eh?" She cocked an eyebrow.

"Don't be scandalous, Lila," said the blonde lady virtuously, and Mr. Flood gave his little sniff of enjoyment.

"Oh, give me five minutes," said Miss Howe cosily. "She'll be down in five minutes. I've been good all the evening. But I'm inclined to agree with her, you know, that Madala was attracted, just because Madala denied it so vehemently. Only Anita goes too far for me. She's right, of course, when she says of Kent-'Not a marrying man!' but not in the way she means it. There are dark and awful things in the history of every unmarried man, to Anita. She scents intrigue everywhere. I'm a spinster myself, but I'm not such a spidery spinster. She may be partly right. Some other man, some question-mark of a man, may have treated Madala badly. But Kent didn't. Kent isn't that sort. Intrigue would bore him. Still, he wasn't a marrying man in those days, and I think Madala was perfectly honest when she said—'Just friends.' But I think also, if you ask me, that they were far too good friends. It's not wise to be friends with a man. You must be a woman first and let him know it. I don't believe in these platonic friendships. So I think that in time Madala found out where they were making the mistake. And he didn't, or wouldn't. Oh well!" she paused expressively, "he's finding it out now. He has been all the year. Didn't you see his face when he eame in tonight? Madala shouldn't have hurried. Poor Madala! Though I don't think it broke her heart, you know,"

"No." The blonde lady nodded. "She was too serene, too placid, for real passion. She could draw it well enough, but always from the outside."

"Oh, I don't think so," said the Baxter girl.

"Think of the end of Ploughed Fields."

"Let's give her some credit for imagination, even if we don't say 'genius'! I agree with Blanche. Oh, perhaps her heart did craek just a little——'

The blonde lady struck in-

"But then Carey's a doctor. So convenient!"

"Yes," said Mr. Flood. "I always said he eaught her on the rebound."

"And then, to mix metaphors, the fat was in the fire. Then, Kent woke up to her. Isn't it obvious? He was fond of Madala Grey, but it was Mrs. Carey that he fell in love with. Just like a man!"

"Oh, I hate you," said Mr. Flood. "You destroy my illusions. I'm like Anita. I demand the tragic Madala."

"You can have her, I should think," said the Baxter girl thoughtfully. "Oh, of course your theory does seem probable as far as it goes, Miss Howe, but——"

"But what?" said Miss Howe.

"Well, she hardly ever eame to town afterwards, did she?"

"Ah, Madala was always wise," said the blonde lady.

Mr. Flood rubbed his hands.

"Thank-you, Beryl. We're in sympathy. And it's quite a satisfying, tragical picture, isn't it? The two artists—he with his lay figure and she with her Hodge, and the long year between them. Can't you see them, cheated, desirous, stretching out to each other their impotent hands? One could make something out of that."

"You could, Mr. Flood," said the Baxter girl fervently.

"Out of what?" Anita was always noiseless. I jumped to hear her voice so close behind me.

Miss Howe looked up at her quizzingly.

"Madala and Where is Kent?"

"With Mother still. He's managed her extraordinarily. She's getting sleepy, thank goodness! He'll be down in a minute." Then, with a change of tone—"Madala and Kent? I think not, Lila dear."

"But you said yourself-" the Baxter girl interposed.

"Oh no! I flung it out—a suggestion—a possibility. I haven't committed myself—yet. I wish I could be sure of Kent. He's upset my conception of him tonight. I should have said—selfish. Especially over Madala. But all men are selfish. Yet, tonight——' she hesitated, playing with the papers that lay half in, half out of the open desk. "But who was it, if it wasn't Kent? Because there was someone, you know——' And then, as if Miss Howe's smile annoyed her beyond prudence—"Do you think I'm inventing? Do you think I've talked for amusement's sake? I tell you, she was on the verge of an elopement. Without benefit of clergy!"

"Anita!" Miss Howe half rose from her chair.

"We're getting it at last." Mr. Flood addressed the room. "I knew she had something up her sleeve."

"I don't believe—I won't believe it," said Miss Howe.

Then Anita smiled.

"Didn't I say she was eareless about her drafts? I've a fragment here—no, I've left it in my writing-table——" and she rose as she spoke—" no name, but it's proof enough. It's an answer to some man's letter."

"But does she definitely consent——?" began the Baxter girl.

"Not in so many words. But it's obvious there was some cause or impediment, and he, whoever he is, has evidently had qualms of eonscience about letting her call the world well lost for his sweet sake."

"That would rule out Kent, of course," said Miss Howe thoughtfully. "There was no reason why Kent shouldn't marry."

"We know of none," said Anita in her suggestive voice. "Isn't that as much as one can say of any man?"

"Ah!" said the Baxter girl, illuminated. I don't know why—her round eyes, I suppose, and м 161

her pursed mouth—but she reminded me of the woodent of Minerva's owl in Larousse.

"So you see my prime difficulty. I've passed under review every man of her acquaintance, till I narrowed down the possible——"

"Affinities," said the blonde lady.

"—to Kent Rehan, John Carey, and this probable but unknown third. There I hang fire. Until I make up my mind on which of the three her love story hinges, I can't do more than trifle with the Life. And how shall I make up my mind?"

"Three?" said Mr. Flood. "Two. You can eliminate the husband. He's fifth act, not third."

"Yes, of course. But I never jump a step. Which leaves me the unknown—or Kent."

The blonde lady leant forward rather eagerly-

"Nita! Where's that letter?"

"I'll get it." She went across the room to her writing-table.

The Baxter girl twisted her head.

"I say! He's coming down the stairs."

"If she read aloud that draft——" the blonde lady's drawl had disappeared. She glittered like an excited schoolgirl—" he might recognize——"

"You mean—?" Mr. Flood raised his eyebrows but Anita, fumbling with her keys, did not hear.

"It would be nice to be sure," said the blonde lady.

"It's rather cruel, isn't it?" said Miss Howe uneasily.

"Why? It'll be printed in the Life. Besides, it may not have been written to him."

"That's why," said Miss Howe.

"It would be nice to be quite sure," said the blonde lady again. And as she spoke Kent Rehan came into the room.

At once I got up, with some blind, blundering idea, I believe, of stopping him, of frustrating them, but Anita was nearer to him than I.

"Is she asleep? Very good of you, Kent. Sit here, Kent. Jenny, is the window open in the passage? Very cold. I never knew such a draught."

I went out to see. I had to do as I was told. Besides, how could I have stopped them or him? Yet I was shaking with anger and disgust at them. and at myself for my hateful tongue-tied youth and insignificance. An older woman would have known what to do. Shaking with cold too-Anita was right-it was bitter cold in the passage. I could hardly see my way to the window for the fog. It was open an inch at the bottom, and at my touch it rattled down with a bang that echoed oddly. For an instant I thought it was a knock at the hall door. I stood a minute, quite startled. peering down into the black well of the hall. But there was no second knock, only the fog-laden draught of the passage came rushing up at me again, and again Anita called to me to come in and shut the door. I did so: and because it rattled, wedged it with the serew of paper that lay near it on the floor, the erumpled telegram that Kent Rehan had dropped when he first eame in. Then, still shivering a little, I sat down where I was. I didn't want to go nearer. I knew my face was tell-tale. I didn't want to have the Baxter girl looking at me, and maybe saying something. I could hear them in the other room well enough. Anita's voice seemed to cut through the thick air. There was a letter in her hand. She was twisting it about as if she couldn't find the first page.

"—obviously a draft." She held it away from her. Anita was long-sighted.

" Dear—dear—

Then it breaks off and begins again. You see?" She displayed it to them.

"Dearest____"

"Why, how clearly it's written!" The Baxter girl peered at it. "That's quite a beautiful hand. That's not Madala's serawl."

The blonde lady looked at them through half shut lids.

"Ah! It's been written slowly-"

"As if she loved writing it!" The Baxter girl flushed. "Did she know about that sort of thing—that sentimental sort of thing? I should have thought her too—oh, too splendid, removed—you know what I mean."

"I don't suppose she talked about it," said Anita coldly. "She was not of your generation." And then, to the others—"I assure you, this letter shook me. Even I never dreamed of this side of her. Listen." She read aloud in her measured voice—

" Dearest-

I wanted your letter so I reckoned out the posts, and the distances, and your busyness. I thought that in two days you would probably write, and then I gave you another day's grace because you hate writing letters, and because I thought you couldn't dream how much I missed you—how much, how soon, I wanted to hear. And then to get your letter the very next day, before I could begin to look for it (but I did look!). Why, you must have written as soon as the train was out of the station! You missed me just as much then?

But it's a mad letter, you know. It makes me laugh and cry. It's so sensible—and so silly. 'Fame', 'career', 'reputation', 'position'—why do you fling these words at me? I am making a sacrifice? Darling, haven't you eyes? Don't you understand that you're my world? All these other things, since I've known you, they're shadows, they're toys, I don't want them. The reviews of my new book—I've never been so delighted at getting any—but why? D'you know why? To show them to you—to watch you shake with laughter as you read them. When a flattering letter turns up, I save it to show you as if it were gold, because I think—'Perhaps it'll make him think more of me.' Isn't it idiotic? But I do. And all the while I glory in the knowledge that all these things, all the fuss and fame, don't mean a brass button to you—or to me, my dear, or to me.

And yet you write me a solemn letter about 'making a sacrifice,' 'abdicating a position.'

Don't be—humble. And yet I like you in this mood. Because it won't last! I won't let it. It's I who am not good enough. If you knew how I tip-toe sometimes. You're so much bigger than I am. I lie in bed at nights, and all the things I've done wrong in my life, all the twisty, tortuous, feminine things, all the lies and cowardices and conceits, come and sting me. I'm so bitterly ashamed of them. I feel I've got to tell you about them all, and yet that if-I do you'll turn me out of your heart. If you did that—if you were disappointed—if you got tired of me—it turns me sick with fear.

I'm a fool to tear myself. I know you love me. And when you're with me I forget all that. I'm just happy. When you're there it's like being in the blazing sunshine. Can 'celebrity' give me that sunshine? Can 'literature' fill my emptiness? Are the books I write children to love me with your eyes? Oh, you fool!

Oh, of course, I know you don't mean it. It's just that you think you ought to protest. But suppose I took you at your word? Suppose I said that, on careful consideration, I felt that I wanted to lead my own life instead of yours? that—how does the list run?—my Work, my Circle of Friends, my Career, were too much to give up for—you? What would you say—no, do? for even I, (and the sun's in my eyes) even I can't call you cloquent! But what would you do if I wouldn't come to you?

Oh, my darling, my darling, you needn't be afraid.

I'd rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God—— people notice it. My friends are grown critical of me. Only yesterday someone (no-one you know) sneered at me—'In love? Oh well, you'll get over it. It's a phase.' You know, they don't understand. I'm not in love', but I love you. There's the difference. I love you. I shall love you till I die. Till——? As if death could blot you out for me! I used to believe in death. I used to believe it ended everything. But now, since I've known you, I can never die. You've poured into me an immortal spirit——"

"Go on," breathed the Baxter girl.

"It breaks off there. It's not signed. It was never sent."

"She had that much wisdom, then." The blonde lady's laughter came to us over Mr. Flood's shoulder. "That's not the letter to send to any man. Giving herself away—giving us all away——"

"To any man? To what man? There's the point. You see the importance. It's the heart of the secret. Who is it? For whom was she ready to give up, in her own words, name, friends, career——?"

"Well, practically she did that, didn't she, when she married Carey? She buried herself in the country. She didn't write a line. You said yourself that she put her career behind her. Why shouldn't it be written to Carey?"

"Oh, don't be absurd. It's Carey that makes it impossible. How could Carey have written a letter needing such an answer? Little he cared. What was her genius to him? Isn't it obvious, isn't it plain as print, that Carey happened, Carey and all he stands for, after the writing of this letter, because of some hitch? Why wasn't the letter sent? What happened? What folly? What misunderstanding? What disillusionment? What realization of danger?—to send her, with that letter half written, into Carey's arms? Carey, that stick, that ordinary man! And on the top of it The Resting-place comes out, the cri du cœur—or, if you like, Lila, the satire—(for I'm beginning to believe you're right) the satire of The Resting-place. I tell you, I smell tragedy."

"It's supposition, it's mere supposition," said Miss Howe impatiently.

"Isn't all detective work supposition to begin with? Wait till I've made my book. Wait till I've sifted my evidence, till I've ranged it, stick and brick, step by step, up, up, up, to the letter."

Suddenly from where he sat, half way between me and them, Kent spoke—

"Anita, you can't publish that letter."

Her face, all their faces, turned towards us. She stared.

"Why not?" And then—"Why do you sit out there? Come here. Come into the light."

He did not stir.

She frowned, puckering her eyes.

"Such a fog," she said fretfully. "I can't see you. Can't you keep that door shut, Jenny?" Then—"Well, Kent—why not? Why not?"

He said slowly-

"It's not decent."

She flared at once.

"Decent! Not decent! What on earth do you mean?"

He kept her waiting while he thought it out.

She stared at him in a sort of angry bewilderment.

- "But why? I shall write her life. One always does print letters."
 - "Not that sort of letter," he said.
- "But don't you see," she cried, "that that letter, just that letter—"

He said—

- "That's why. How dare you read that letter here—aloud—tonight? It—it's ghoulish."
 - "Kent!" There was outrage in her voice.
- "But Kent—" Miss Howe intervened—" we knew her—we care—it's in all reverence——"

And Mr. Flood-

"My dear man, she's not a private character. The lives that will be written! Anita's may be the classic, but it won't be the only one. Letters are bound to be printed—every scrap she ever wrote. Nobody can stop it. It's only a question of time. The public has its rights."

"To what?" He turned savagely. "You've had her books. She's given enough. Will you leave her nothing private, nothing sacred?"

"But Kent, can't you see—" Anita had an air of pushing Miss Howe and Mr. Flood from her road—" aren't you artist enough to see——? A writer, a woman like Madala, she has no private life. She lives to write. She lives what she writes. She is what she writes. She gives her soul to the world. She leaves her riddle to be read. Don't you see? to be read. That's what I'm doing. That's what I'm going to do—read her—for the rest of you, for the publie. Because—because they eare, because we all eare. It's done in all honour. It's a tribute. And for what I am going to do, such a letter is the key."

She spoke softly, sweetly, persuasively. She wooed him to agree with her. She was extraordinarily eager for his approval. And the approval of the others she did win. They were all murmuring agreement.

His eyes strayed over them, undecidedly, seeking—not help. I do not know what he sought, but his eyes found mine.

"You—" he said to me—" would you want your letter——?"

Anita's voice thrust in sharply. In the instant the pleading, the beauty, the woman, was gone from it. It was cold and shrill.

"Jenny's views can hardly concern us."

But he did not listen to her. He had drawn some answer from me that satisfied him. He got up.

"Oh," I cried beneath my breath, and I think I touched his arm—"you won't let her?"

He shook his head. Then he went aeross to where Anita stood, her eyes on him, on me, while she listened to Miss Howe whispering at her shoulder.

"Look here, Anita!" he began.

"I'm looking," she said.

He cheeked a moment, puzzled. Then he went on—

"That letter—you can't print it. You've no right. It's not your property."

She waved it aside.

"I shall be literary executor. She promised. It's mine if it's anyone's. It's no good, Kent, it goes into the book. Nothing ean alter that. Nothing——"

Then she stopped dead. There was that same odd look in her eye as there had been when she watched us—that flicker of euriosity, and behind it the same gleam of inexplicable anger.

"Look here—" she said very deliberately—"look you here—what has it got to do with you?"

It was not the words, it was the tone. It was shameless. It was as if she had cried aloud her hateful questions—'Did you love her?' 'What was there between you?' 'I want to know it all.

It tears me not to know.' But what she said to him, and before he could answer, was—

"If, of course—anyone—had any right—could prove any right——" She broke off, watching him closely. But he said nothing. "If," she said, and poked with her finger, "if that letter—if you recognized it—if that were the rough draft of a letter that had been sent——"

He stared down at her. His face was bleak.

"You'll get no copy from me, Anita!"

"Oh!" She caught her breath, fierce and wicked as a cat with a bird, yet shrinking as a cat does, supple, cars flat. "I only meant—I said right. If anyone—if you could satisfy me—if you have any right——"

He said—

"I have no right."

"Oh well, then!" She shrugged her shoulders.

"But," he held stubbornly to his purpose, "whoever has a right to it—you ean't print that letter."

She laughed at him.

"You'll see! You'll see!"

"Yes," he said, "I'll see."

They held each other's eyes, angry, angry. I felt how Kent Rehan loathed her. And she—yes, she must have hated him. She was all bitterness and triumph and defiance. Yet all the time I was wanting to eatch him by the arm and say—'Be kind to her. Say something kind and she'll give in.' I knew it. He had only to say in that instant—'Anita, I beg of you—' and she would have given him the letter. I knew it. I know it. I don't know how I knew it, but I was sure. But he was a man: of course he saw nothing. He was very angry. He looked big and fine. I wondered that she could stand outfacing him.

But she, for answer, picked up the letter, and affected to search through it.

"Had I finished? Where was I? Ah, yes—
'An immortal spirit——'"

His hand came down heavily and swept the light table aside.

"You can't do it. You shan't do it. By God you shan't."

How it happened I couldn't see. He was too quick. But at one moment she held the letter, and in the next he had it, and was kneeling at the grate, while she cried out—

"Kent!" And then—"Lila! Jasper! Stophim!"

Nobody could have stopped him. There was no flame, but the fire still burned, a caked red and black lump, smouldering on cinders. He picked it up—with his naked hands—thrust in the crumpled stiff paper, and smashed it down again, so that the lump split, and still held it pressed down, with naked hands, till the sheet had charred and shrivelled into nothing. I suppose it all happened in a few seconds, but it seemed like hours. I was in a train smash once: I wasn't hurt; but I remember that I came out of it with just the same sense of being battered and aged. This seene I had only watched: I had not shared in it: I was still in the little outer room. Yet I was shaken. I heard Mr. Flood call out—"Kent, you crazy fool!" I heard Anita—"Let me go, Lila!" And then the women were between me and him, and I could only see their backs, and there was a babel of voices, and I found myself sitting like a fool, clutching at the arms of my chair, and saying over and over again—"Oh, his hands, his hands, his poor hands!" The tears were running down my checks.

But nobody noticed me. They were all too busy. The group had shifted a little. The Baxter girl was edged out of it, and I watched her for a moment as she sat down again, her checks flaming, her eyes as bright as wet pebbles. She looked—it's the only word—consumptive with excitement. Every now and then she tried not to cough. I heard her saying—"It's the fog, it's the awful fog!" defensively. But nobody listened. They were all watching Anita.

Anita was dreadful. She was tremulous with anger. She was like a pendulum with the check taken away. Her whole body shook. She couldn't finish her sentences. She talked to everyone at once.

Miss Howe had her by the arm. Miss Howe was trying to quiet her—

"My dear woman—steady now! You don't want a row, you know! You've got the rest of the papers." But she might have talked to the wind.

"He comes into my house—my property—in my own house—— It's an outrage! Kent, it's an outrage!"

Kent Rehan rose to his feet. It was like a rock breaking through that froth of women. He stood a moment, nervously, brushing the black from his hands and wincing as he did so. Then he looked up. His eyes met hers. He flushed.

"Kent! Kent!" She flung off Miss Howe.

The intensity of reproach in her voice startled me, and I think it startled him. I found myself thinking—'All this anger for what? for a burnt paper? It's impossible! But then—then what's the matter with her?'

He said awkwardly-

"I'm sorry, Anita."

"You!" she cried panting—"You, to interfere! D'you know what you've done, what you've tried to do? Will you take everything, you and he? Haven't I my work too? Oh, what you've had from her, what you've had from her! And now you cheat me!"

He was bewildered. He said again-

"I'm sorry, Anita."

She eame close to him. Her little hands were clenched. There was a wail in her voice—

"You! Aren't you friends with me? Didn't I share her with you? Isn't she my work too? What would you say if I came to your house and saw your work, your life work that she'd made possible, your pictures that are her, all her—and slashed them with a knife? What would you do if I'd done that, if I'd cut it to ribbons, your Spring Song?"

That moved him. I saw a sort of comprehension lighting his stubborn face. The artist in her touched the artist in him. Of what lay behind the artist he had no knowledge. But he said, quite humbly—

"Anita, I'm sorry!"

Yet I knew that he was not sorry for what he had done.

"Sorry! Sorry! Much good your sorrow does!" she shrilled, and I saw him stiffen again. She was strange. She valued him, that was so plain, and yet, it almost seemed in self-defence, she was always at her worst with him. "Sorry! It was the key of the book. You've spoilt my book."

"Nita! Nita! One letter!" Miss Howe was almost comical in her dislike of the scene. "As if you couldn't pull it off without that." She pulled her aside, lowering her voice—"Nita, what's the use of a row? Pull yourself together. Put yourself in his place. Besides—you can't afford——"She looked at Kent significantly. Anita's pale glance followed her and so their eyes met again. She was angry and sullen and irresolute. Another woman would have been near tears.

"Kent," she began. And then—"Kent—if we quarrel—We're too old to quarrel—If you had a shadow of excuse—"

He waited.

She took fire again because he did not meet her half way.

"But if you think you've stopped me——" she cried. She broke off with a laugh and a new idea—
"As if," she said slowly and scornfully, " as if Madala would have cared!"

He said distinctly-

"You didn't know her. You'd never understand-"

"Ah," she said, pressing forward to him, "why do you take that tone? What is it I don't understand? If you'd help me with what you know, it could be big stuff. I'd forgive you for the letter if you'd work with me." She hung on his answer.

But he only said, not looking at her, in the same tone—

"You'd never understand." And then, with an effort—"I'll go, Anita. I'm going. I'd better go."

Without waiting for her answer he went across the room to the little sofa near me where the hats and coats lay piled. I heard him fumbling for his things.

But Anita went back to the others. The watching group seemed to open to receive, to enclose her. Her head had touched the lamp as she passed under it, and set it swaying wildly, so that I could scarcely see their faces in that shift of light and shadow through the thickened air. But I heard her angry laugh, and her voice overtopping the murmur—"Mad! He was always mad! If he weren't such an old friend——" And then the Baxter girl's voice—"Think of the sketches there must be!" And Miss Howe—"What I say is—you don't want to quarrel!" And hers again—"Did you hear him? I not understand Madala! Mad, I tell you! If I don't know Madala——"

It was at that moment that I looked up and saw a woman standing in the doorway.

"Anita!" I murmured warningly. But my voice did not reach her, and indeed, she and the little gesticulating group in the further room seemed suddenly far away. The air had been thickening for the last hour, and now, with the opening of the door, the fog itself came billowing in on either side of the newcomer as water streams past a ship. It flooded the room, soundlessly, almost, I remember thinking, purposefully, as if it would have islanded us, Kent and me. It affected me curiously. I felt muffled. I knew I ought to get up and call again to Anita or attend to the visitor myself, but the quiet seemed to dull my wits. I found myself placidly wondering who she was and why she did not come in; but I made no movement to welcome her. I just sat still and stared.

She was a tall girl—woman—for either word fitted her: she had brown hair. She was dressed in—I should have said, if you had asked me, that I could remember every detail, and I can in my own mind; but when I try to write it down, it blurs. But I know that there was blue in her dress, and bright colours. It must have been some flowered stuff. She looked—it's a silly phrase—but she looked like a spring day. I wanted her to come into the room and drive away the fog that was making me blink and feel dizzy. There was a gold ring on her finger: ves, and her hands were beautiful-strong, white hands. In one she held the brass candle-stick that stood in the hall, and with the other she sheltered the weak flame from the draught. Yet not only with her hand. Her arm was crooked maternally, her shoulder thrust forward, her hip raised, in a gesture magnificently protecting, as though the newlit tallow-end were fire from heaven. Her whole body seemed sacredly involved in an act of guardianship. But half the glory of her pose-and it was lovely enough to make mc catch my breath—was its unconsciousness; for her attention was all ours. Her eyes, as she listened to the group by the hearth, were sparkling with amusement and that tolerant, deep affection that one keeps for certain dearest, foolish friends. It was evident that she knew them well.

"Can't you keep that door shut, Jenny? The draught——"

Anita's back was towards me. Her voice, as she spoke over her shoulder, rang high, muffled, injurious, and—I laughed. In a flash the stranger's eyes were on me, and I found myself thrilling where I sat, absurdly startled for the moment, because-she knew me too! She knew me quite well. She was smiling at me, not vaguely as who should say-'Oh, surely I've seen you somewhere?' but with intimate, disturbing knowledge. It was the glance that a doctor gives you, the swift, acquainted glance that, without offence, deciphers you. I was not offended either, only curious and-attracted. She looked so friendly. I half began to say- But when? but where?' but her bearing overruled me. Her mouth was pursed conspiratorially: if her hand had been free she would have put a finger to her lip. I smiled back at her, flattered to be partner in her uncomprehended secret. But I was curious-oh, I was curious! It was incredible to me that Anita and the rest should stand, subduing their voices to the soft, thick stillness that she and the fog between them had brought into the room, and yet remain unconscious of her vivid presence. I was longing to see their faces when they should at last turn and see her, and yet, if you understand, I was afraid lest they should turn too soon and break the pleasant numbness that was upon me. And upon them-the spell was upon them too. It was the look in her eyes, not glamorous, but kind. It healed. It passed like a drowse across the squabblers at the table: it stilled Anita's feverish monologue. Indeed the room had grown very still. There was no sound left in it but the slurring of the lamp. It rested upon Kent as he stood in dumb misery, and I watched the strained lines of his body slacken and grow easier beneath it. At that—at that ease she gave him—suddenly I loved her.

N 2 179

And as if I had spoken, as if I had touched her with my hand, her eyes, that had grown heavy with his trouble, turned, brightening, upon me, as if I were the answer to a problem, the lifting of a care. But what the problem was I could not then tell: for, staring as she made me-as she made me-into her divining eyes, I saw in them not her thought but my own at last made clear to me-my dream, my hope, my will and my desire, new-born and naked, and, I swear it, bodiless to me before that night and that hour. It was too soon. I was not ready. It shamed me and I flinched, my glance wandering helplessly away like a dog's when you have forced it to look at you. And so noticed, idly, uncomprehending at first, and then with a stiffening of my whole body, that her hand did not show as other hands, blood-red against the light she screened, but coldly luminous, like the fingers of a cloud through which the moon is shining: and that her breast was motionless, unstirred by any breath.

Then I was afraid.

I felt my skin rising. I felt my bones grow cold. I could not move. I could not breathe. I could not think.

A voice came out of the fog that had thickened to a wall between the rooms—a voice, thin, remote, like a trunk call—

"Can't you keep that door shut, Jenny? The draught——" and was cut off again by the sudden crash of an overturned chair. There was a rush and a cry—a madman's voice, shouting, screaming, groaning—

"Madala Grey! My God, Madala Grey!" and Kent's huge body, hurling against the door, pitched and fell heavily.

For the door was shut.

I ran to him. He was shaken and half stunned, but he struggled to his feet. It was dreadful to see him. He was like a frightened horse, shivering and sweating. His lips were loose and he muttered unevenly as if the words came without his will. I eaught them as I helped him; the same words—always the same words.

I got him to the sofa while the rest of them crowded and clamoured, and then I found myself taking command. I made them keep off. I sent Anita for water and a towel and I bathed his forchead where he had cut it on the moulding of the door. Mr. Flood wanted to send for a doctor, but I wouldn't have it. I knew how he would hate it. Then someone—the Baxter girl, I think—giggled hysterically and said something about a black eye tomorrow, and then—"How did it happen?" "Did you see, Miss Summer?" And at that they all began to clamour again like an orchestra after a solo, repeating in all their voices—"Yes, what happened? What on earth was it? Did you see him? Some sort of a seizure? I told you twice to shut that door. The draught—— Are you better now, old man? Kent—what happened?"

They were crowding round him again. He pointed a shaking finger.

"She saw," he said. "She knows--"

"Jenny?" Anita turned on me sharply, an employer addressing a servant at fault. "Oh, of course—you were in here too. What happened then?"

I had a helpless moment.

"Well?" she demanded.

I stared at her. It was incredible, but there was actually jealousy in her voice. It said, pitifully plainly—'Again I have missed the centre of a situation!'

"Well?" she repeated. And then—"If you saw something——" She altered the phrase—" Tell us what you saw."

But I had not missed the quick fear that had shown, for a moment, in Kent's eyes—fear of betrayal even while his tongue was betraying him.

I laughed. I thought to myself as I answered, 'Oh, I am doing this beautifully!' And I was. My voice sounded perfectly natural, not a bit high. I had plenty of words. I said, most jauntily—

"Oh, Cousin Nita, I could hardly see my own nose. The fog had been simply pouring in. My fault—I didn't latch the door properly, I suppose. And then you called, and Mr. Rehan went to shut it for me, and he slithered on the mat, and——"

" I see!"

"Of course! Parquet——" The Baxter girl took a step or two and pirouetted back to us. "Perfeet! You ought to give a dance, Miss Serle."

Anita made no answer, but taking the can and the towel she opened the door of dispute, and, stooping an instant on the threshold to lift some small object from the floor, went out of the room. We heard her set down her load on the landing, and the rattle of the sash as she threw up the window, paused, and shut it again. She came back. A fresh inflow of aerid vapour preceded her and set us coughing. It was the stooping, I suppose, that had reddened her cheeks, for she was flushed when she came back to us. It was the only time that I ever saw my cousin with a colour. She spoke to us, a little gaspingly, as if the fog had caught her too by the throat—

"Jenny's quite right. One can't see an inch in front of one. No—not a cab in hearing. You'll have to resign yourselves to staying on indefinitely. What? oh, what nonsense, Kent! As if I'd let you go in that state! Besides, there's Jasper's poem. Are you going away without hearing it?" The soft monologue continued as she shepherded them to the fire. "That's always the way—one talks—one gets no work done. Get under the light, Jasper! Beryl, help me to move the table. Oh yes, Jasper, I forgot to tell you, I met Roy Huth the other day and he had just read——-"

I heard a movement behind me. I turned. Kent had half risen. He spoke—

"Sit down. Sit down here." He touched the cushion beside him.

I shook my head.

"Not yet. My cousin-"

" Ah——"

We were silent.

I watched Anita. She stood a few moments in unsmiling superintendence, while the women settled themselves and Mr. Flood sorted his papers and cleared his throat. Then, as I had known she would do, she returned soft-footed to her purpose. At the same moment I left Kent Rehan's side. When she reached the archway between the two rooms, I was there.

"And now——" she confronted me—" what happened?"

"I told you."

She smiled.

"Did you? I have forgotten. Tell me again."

"Anita—he slipped. He fell. He was shutting the door."

"Did he replace this?" She opened her little hand. The wedge of paper that I had twisted lay on her palm. "It was shut in the door when I opened it just now." She waited a moment. Then, with a certain triumph—"Well?"

I said nothing. What was there to say? She tossed it from her.

"Don't be silly, Jenny! What was it? Who was it?" Her eyes were horribly intelligent.

"He slipped. He fell. He was shutting the door." I felt I could go on saying that for ever and ever.

The red patches in her cheeks deepened. She spoke past me, rudely, furiously—

"I intend to know. I've a perfect right——Kent, I intend to know."

I put out my arms carclessly, though my heart was thudding, and rested them against the door-posts.

"He's shaken—a heavy man like that. Better leave him alone."

"I intend to know," she insisted. And then—"Jenny! Jenny! Let me pass."

"No!" I said.

For a second we stood opposed, and in that second I realized literally for the first time (so dominating had her personality been) that she was shorter than I. She was dwindling before my eyes. I found myself looking down at her with almost brutal composure. That I had ever been afraid of her was the marvel! For I was young, and she was elderly. I was strong, and she was weak. Her bare arms were like sticks, but mine were round and supple, and I could feel the blood tingle in them as my grip tightened on the wood-work. She was only Anita Serle, the well-known writer; but I was Jenny Summer, and Kent was needing me.

"Jenny—you will be sorry!" Her eyes and her voice were one threat. Such eyes! Eyes whose pupils had dilated till the irids were mere threads that encircled jealousy itself—jealousy black and bitter—jealousy that had stolen upon us as the fog had done, obscuring, soiling, stifling friend and enemy alike—jealousy of a gift and a great name, of a dead woman and a living man and their year of happiness—jealousy beyond reason, beyond pity—jealousy insatiable, already seeking out fresh food, turning deliberately, vengefully, upon Kent and upon me.

I felt sick. I had never dreamed that there could be such feelings in the world. And now she was going to Kent, to probe and lacerate and poison—

"No!" I said.

Actually she believed that she could pass me!

I still held fast by the door-posts, and she did not use her hands. We were silent and decorous, but for an instant our bodies fought. She was pressed against me, panting—

" No!" I said.

Then she fell away, and without another word turned and went back into the other room.

I saw Miss Howe whisper some question. There was an instant's silence. Then her answer came—

"Much better leave him alone. Yes--rather shaken—a heavy man like that."

It was defeat. She was using my very words, because, for all her fluency, she had none with which to cover it.

I was sorry. I felt a brute. But what else could I have done? I stood a moment watching her recover herself. Then I went back to Kent.

He did not look up, but he moved a little to give me room. I sat down beside him. We were shut away between the wall and the window, in the shadow, out of sight of the others. It was very peaceful. Now and then I looked at Kent, but he was staring before him. He had forgotten all about me again. I knew. But I was content. It made me happy to be sitting by him. My thoughts hopped about like birds after crumbs. I remember wondering what I should do on the morrow—where I should go? That Anita would have me in the house another twenty-four hours was not likely. I had ten pounds. I did not care. I knew that I ought to be anxious. but I could not realize the need. I could not think of anything but him; yet I was afraid to speak to him. He sat so still. His face was set in schooled and heavy lines. There came a stir and a clash of voices from the other room, but he did not seem to hear it. It was only the end of a poem. In a little it had settled down again into the same monotonous hum, but for a moment I had thought that it was the break-up, and after that I had no peace. It had seared me. It made me realize that I had only a few minutes—half an hour at most—and that then he would be going away—and when should I see him again? Never—maybe never! He had his life all arranged. He didn't even know my name. I felt desperate. I couldn't let him go. I didn't know what to do. I only knew that—that I couldn't bear it if he went away from me.

It was then that he moved and straightened himself in his chair with a sigh, that heavy, long-drawn sigh that men give when they make an end. 'Work or play, joy or grief, it's done with. And now——?' Such a sigh as you never hear from women. But then we are not wise at ending things.

I thought that he was getting up, that he was going then and there, and instinctively I hurried into speech, daring anything—everything—his own thoughts of me—rather than let him go.

"Yes-that's over!" I translated softly.

He turned with such a stare that I could have smiled.

"I meant that. How did you know?"

"Why shouldn't I know?" I did smile then. It made him smile back at me, but doubtfully, unwillingly.

"Can you read thoughts—too?" The last word seemed to come out in spite of himself.

"Not always. Yours I can." My face was burning. But I could have spared myself the shame that made it burn, for he did not understand. My voice said nothing to him. My face showed him nothing. He was thinking about himself. But he leant forward in that way he has—a dear way—of liking to talk to you.

"Can you? I never can. Only when I paint. I can put them into paint, of course. But not words. She said-" and all through the subsequent talk he avoided the name—"she said it was laziness, a lazy mind. But I always told her that that was her fault. I-we-her people-were just wool: she knitted us into our patterns. She was a wonder. You know, she-she was good for one. She was like bread-bread and wine-" His voice strained and flagged.

I nodded.

"Yes. I felt that too."

He glanced sideways at me.

"Ah, then you knew her?" His voice (or I imagined it) had chilled. It began to say, that faint chill, that if I too were of 'the set,' he could not be at case. But I would not give him time to think awry.

"No, no! Only tonight. But I do know her."

"Tonight?"

"Tonight," I said and looked at him.
"Then——" his hand tightened on the chair, " you saw? I was right? You did see?"

"I saw-something," I admitted.

"Some-one?"

I nodded.

His face lighted up. He pulled in his chair to me.

"Her hands-did you notice her hands? I have a drawing of them somewhere. I'll show it to you——" He stopped short: Then—"What is your name?" he asked me.

"Jenny. Jenny Summer."

He considered that fact for a moment and put it aside again.

"I'd like you to see it. Anita will want it for that damned scrap-book of hers. She'll be worrying at me—they all will."

"You won't let it go?" I said quickly.

He shook his head.

"No. But they can't understand why. They can't understand anything. They thought I was mad just now. So I was, for that matter. To see her again, you know—to see her again——'

"I know," I said.

He laughed nervously.

"Hallucination, of course. Thought transference. What you please. They'd say so. Do you think so? And I'd been thinking of my picture of her. Oh, I admit it. So we must look at the matter in the light of common-sense."

"But I saw her too."

His eyes softened, and his voice.

"Yes. You were there. That's comfort. You saw her too—standing there with her dear hands full of cowslips——"

"A torch," I said.

"Cowslips——" he checked on the word. "What?"

"She was carrying a candle," I insisted. "It had just been lighted. She was holding it so carefully."

We stared at each other.

"You're sure?"

"Sure."

He fell back wearily in his chair.

"What's the good of talking? She's dead. That's the end of it. I was dreaming. Of course. But when you said that you saw, for a moment I believed—— What does it matter? What does it matter anyway? But her hands were full of cowslips."

I turned to him eagerly. I knew what to say. It was as if the words were being whispered to me.

"That was your Madala Grey. But mine—how could she be the same? Oh, can't you see? We've never seen the real Madala Grey. She gave—she became—to each of us—what we wanted most. She wrote down our dreams. She was our dreams. Can't you see what she meant to my cousin? Anita toils and slaves for her little bit of greatness. But she was born royal. That's why Anita hates her so—hates her and worships her. Why, she's been a sort of star to you all—a symbol—a legend—

But the real Madala Gray—she wasn't like that. She was just a girl. She was hungry all the time. She was wanting her human life. And he, the man they laugh at, 'the thing she married,' he did love that real Madala Grey. Why, he didn't even know of the legend. Don't you see that that was what she wanted? She could take from him as well as give. Life—the bread and wine—they shared it. Oh, and it's him I pity now, not you. Not you," I said again, while my heart ached over him. "You—can't you see what she showed you? Not herself——"

"What then?" he said harshly.

I made the supreme effort.

"But what—a woman—one day—would be to you."

I thought the silence would never break.

The strange courage that had been in me was suddenly gone. I felt weak and friendless. I wanted to cry. I waited and waited till I could bear it no longer. Then I lifted my eyes desperately, with little hope, to read in his face what the end should be.

I found him looking at me fixedly—at me, you understand, not through me to a subject that absorbed him, but at me myself. It was as if he were seeing me for the first time. No—as if he recognized me at last.

Then the doubts went, and the shame and the loneliness. It made me so utterly happy, that look on his face. I felt my heart beating fast.

He said then, slowly—I can remember the words, the tone and pitch of his voice, the very shaping of his mouth as he said it—

"Do you know-it's strange-you remind me of her. You are very like her. You are very like Madala Grey."

The hunger in his voice hurt me. I wanted to put my arms round him and comfort him. I might have done it, for I knew I was still but half real to him. But I sat still—only, with such a sense in my heart of a trust laid upon me, of an inheritance, of a widening and golden future, I said to him—

"Yes. I know."

THE END

October 1917-April 1919.

PRINTED IN GREAT BRITAIN BY RICHARD CLAY & SONS, LIMITED, BRUNSWICK ST., STAMFORD ST., S.E. 1, AND BUNGAY, SUFFOLK.

RECENT FICTION

THE OLD MADHOUSE

By WILLIAM DE MORGAN

7s. net

William de Morgan was engaged upon this novel during the last two or three years of his life, and at the time of his death in 1916 it was complete except for the last chapter. Fortunately the novelist left very full notes, which have enabled his wife, who had talked over the story with her husband at every stage of its progress, to finish the book in accordance with his intentions.

"Mr. de Morgan had the priceless, incommunicable, neverto-be-defined gifts which the ultra-modern novelist too often lacks; he could create characters which were not fractions of himself, and he could make a story out of their sayings and doings. . . All the persons of the drama . . . are very much alive . . . a gentle humour flickers, like summer lightning, over every page."—Morning Post.

STORM IN A TEACUP

By EDEN PHILLPOTTS

7s. net

"The book touches life at every point, and is, on the whole, truer to life than any previous novel of Mr. Phillpotts; and there is in it less of the grim pain-dark atmosphere of Dartmoor and more of the bright sunniness of the river part."—Evening Standard.

JINNY THE CARRIER

By ISRAEL ZANGWILL

7s. net

"Tells with infinite tenderness and humour a simple idyll of village lores and village ways."—Daily Graphic.

"A pleasant change from the bewildering and superficial cleverness of so much of our modern fiction."—Pall Mall Gazette.

JAVA HEAD

By JOSEPH HERGESHEIMER

7s. net

Author of "The Three Black Pennys."

"'Java Head' is an exquisite piece of work, and one that will transport you from the prose of life into the regions of genuine romance."—Punch.

WM. HEINEMANN, 21 Bedford Street, W.C. 2

RECENT FICTION

YELLOW LEAF

By SACHA GREGORY

7s. net

"'Yellow Leaf' strikes us as being one of the most perfect compositions of the day."—Daily Chronicle.

THE MOON AND SIXPENCE

By WILLIAM SOMERSET MAUGHAM

7s. net

"Mr. Maugham has given us a ruthless and penetrating study in personality with a savage truthfulness of delineation and an icy contempt for the heroic and the sentimental."—Times.

"Strickland is alive as few figures in recent fiction have been. . . . Mr. Maugham has certainly done nothing better than this book about him."—Punch.

THE BONFIRE

By ANTHONY BRENDON

7s. net

"A series of illuminations flashed on the system of mental and spiritual training practised at a school managed by Jesuits. Mr. Brendon's indictment is the more impressive for his scrupulous fairness."—Westminster Gazette.

FORTHCOMING NOVELS

AGAINST THE GRAIN

By Mrs. DAWSON-SCOTT

THE TAVERN

By RENÉ JUTA

THE INSCRUTABLE LOVERS

By ALEXANDER MACFARLAN

ELI

By M. A. PEAKE

WM. HEINEMANN, 21 Bedford Street, W.C. 2

A SELECTION FROM

Mr. William Heinemann's Catalogue

Books actually in print, AUTUMN, 1919.

NAME OF BOOK P	rice L	ist
Abbott, Eleanor. Molly Make-Believe	2	0
Love and Mrs. Kendrue	2	ŏ
Abthome, John. The Arts and Living	6	0
Adam, Mme. Edmond (Juliette Lamber). The
Romance of My Childhood and Youth	7	6
The Schemes of the Kaiser	3	0
Adam, Villiers de L'Isle. His Life and Work	10	6
Adams, H. Isabel. Wild Flowers of the British
Isles	30	0
Adams, W. Dacres. A Book of Beggars	3	6
Agnew, Georgette. The Bread upon the Waters.	6	0
The Night that brings out Stars	6	0
Aldin, Cecil. A Gay Dog	5	0
Alexander, Major H. M. On Two Fronts	3	6
Allemandy, V. H. Elementary Business Training	3	0
Allen, Charles. Papier Mâché. Cloth, 3s. Paper	2	6
Anderson, W. M. Rhymes of a Rouseabout	3	6
Andrews, Cyril Bruyn. An Introduction to the Study of Adolescent Education	5	0
Angell, Norman. The Foundations of Inter-		•
national Polity Peace Theories and the Balkan War	$\frac{3}{2}$	6 0
Prussianism and its Destruction	ء 1	0
The Great Illusion 2s. 6d. Limp Leather	5	0
Anon. As Others saw Him: A Retrospect A.D. 54	6	0
From Dartmouth to the Dardanelles	2	0
From Snotty to Sub. (By the Author of
"From Dartmouth to the Dardanelles")	2	0
He Who Passed. To M. L. G. 6s. Cheaper Ed.	3	6
The Life Mask Paint the Lily	6 6	0
Roses and How to Grow Them	2	6
The Russian Diary of an Englishman	12	ŏ
Uncensored Letters from the Dardanelles	3	6
Anstey, F. The Brass Bottle. Paper, 1s. 6d. Cloth	2	6
The Pocket Ibsen. Paper, 2s. 6dCloth	3	6
Anthon, Rose. Stories of India	6	()

"Anzac." On the Anzac Trail	3	6
Archer, A. B., M.A. A Secondary School Course
in Geography. Vol. I	2	6
Archer, William. Real Conversations	6	0
Aristotle. (See "Illustrated Cameos of Literature")
Arlen, Michael. The London Venture	3	6
Armstrong, Sir Walter. Art in Great Britain and Ireland	10	0
Gainsborough and his Place in English Art	15	0
Sir Joshua Reynolds15s. and	£5 5	0
Armstrong, W. N. Around the World with a King (Kalagua, King of the Hawaiian Islands)	7	6
Ars Una-Species Mille Each vol.	10	0
Art in Great Britain and Ireland. By Sir
Walter Armstrong.
Art in Spain and Portugal. By Marcel Dieulafoy.
Art in France. By Louis Hourticq.
Art in Egypt. By Sir Gaston Maspero.
Art in Northern Italy. By Commendatore
Corraco Ricci
Art in Flanders. By Max Rosses.
Aschaffenburg, G. (See "Modern Criminal Science Series.")
Aston, W. G. Japanese Literature	6	0
Atherton, Gertrude. An Idyll of the Redwoods	2	0
Backhouse, E. (See "Bland.")
Baddeley, St. Clair. Charles III of Naples and
Urban VI	10	6
Bagnold, Enld. The Sailing Ships	5	0
A Diary Without Dates	2	6
Bailey, L. H. The Nature Study Idea	5	0
Bak, Outrageous Fortune		0
Balestier, Wolcott. The Average Woman	3	6
Benefits Forgot		0
Captain, My Captain!	3	6
A Common Story		6
Reffey	3	6
Barrett, Frank. The Justification of Andrew
Lebrun	3	0
Kitty's Father	1	6

Barthou, Louis. Mirabeau	10	0
Bartlett, Ellis Ashmead. With the Turks in
Thrace	10	0
Bartolozzi. (See "Great Engravers.")
Batiffol, Louis. The Duchesse de Chevreuse	10	0
(See also under "National History of France.")
Baum, Dr. Julius. Romanesque Architecture in
France	25	0
Baxendale, Arthur. The Ball	2	6
Beach, Mrs. Wm. Hicks. A Cotswold Family	12	6
Beale, Sophia. Recollections of a Spinster Aunt	8	6
Beasley, Captain H. M. London Bridge and
How it is Played	2	6
Beckford. (See "Melville.")
Bédier, Joseph. Romance of Tristram and Iseult	15	0
Beerbohm, Max. A Christmas Garland	5	0
Fifty Caricatures	6	0
Zuleika Dobson. An Oxford Love Story	6	0
Seven Men	7	0
Behn, Aphra. The Works of Aphra Behn. Set of
6 vols	£3 3	0
Behrs, C. A. Recollections of Count Leo Tolstoy	6	0
Bell, Alured Gray. The Beautiful Rio de Janeiro	£2 2	0
Bell, Edward. The Political Shame of Mexico	7	6
Bell, Edward. The Political Shame of Mexico Bell, Fred. W. The South African Conspiracy	5	0
Bell, Gertrude Lowthian. Amurath to Amurath	16	0
Poems from the Divan of Hafiz	6	0
Syria: The Desert and the Sown	7	6
Bendall, Gerard. Mrs. Jones' Bonnet	4	0
Benedite Leonce. Gustave Courbet	3	6
Benjamin, René. Gaspard the Poilu	5	0
Benson, E. F. Account Rendered. 6s. Cheaper Ed.	3	6
An Act in a Backwater	6	0
The Angel of Pain	6	0
The Blotting Book	2	6
The Book of Months	6	0
The Climber	6	0
House of Defence. 6sCheaper Ed.	3	6
Juggernaut. 6sCheaper Ed.	3	6
The Osbornes	3	6
Paul. 6sCheaper Ed.	3	6

The Princess Sophia. 6sCheaper Ed.	3	6
The Relentless City. 6sCheaper Ed.	3	6
Scarlet and Hyssop	6	0
The Weaker Vessel. 6sCheaper Ed.	3	6
Benson, Margaret. The Soul of a Cat and other
Stories	3	6
Beresford, J. D. Goslings	6	0
The House in Demetrius Road. 6s. Cheaper Ed.	3	6
Berget, Alphonse. The Conquest of the Air	6	0
Beringer, Mrs. Oscar. The New Virtue. Paper	2	6
Berman, Hannah. Jewish Children	7	0
Bernhardt, Madame Sarah. Du Théâtre au Champ d'Honneur	1	0
My Double Life	15	0
Bethell, Hon. Victor. Bridge Reflections	2	6
Monte Carlo Anecdotes and Systems of Play	2	0
Beyerlein, Franz Adam. Jena or Sedan? 6s.
Paper Boards	2	0
Lights Out. Cloth 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
Bianco, Pamela. Flora. A Book of Drawings.
With Verses by Walter de la Mare	25	0
Bigelow, Mrs. While Charlie was Away	2	6
Binnie-Clark, Georgina. Wheat and Woman	6	0
Binyon, Laurence. Auguries	3	6
Björnson, Björnstjerne. Synnövé Solbakken	3	0
Arne	3	0
A Happy Boy	3	0
The Fisher Lass	3	0
The Bridal March and One Day	3	0
Magnhild and Dust	3	0
Captain Mansana and Mother's Hands	3	0
Absalom's Hair and a Painful Memory	3	0
In God's Way2 vols.	6	0
The Heritage of the Kurts2 vols.	6	0
Mary	3	0
Blake, J. P. and A. E. Reveirs-Hopkins. Little
Books about Old FurnitureEach vol.	4	0
Vol. I. Tudor to Stuart.
,, II. The Period of Queen Anne.
,, III. Chippendale and his School. ,, IV. The Sheraton Period.
IV The Chemeter Davied

Blanchan, Neltje. The American Flower Garden	21	0
How to Attract Birds, and other Talks about
Bird Neighbours	5	0
Nature's Garden	12	6
Bland, J. O. P., and Backhouse, E. Annals and
Memoirs of the Court of Peking	16	0
China Under the Empress Dowager, 16s.
Popular Ed.	6	0
Bland, J. O. P. Germany s Violations of the Laws of WarCloth, 5s. Popular Ed. (Paper)	2	0
Houseboat Days in China	7	6
Recent Events and Present Policies in China	16	0
Bleloch, W. The New South Africa: Its Value and Development	5	0
Boigne, Comtesse de. Memoirs. In 4 vols.
Each vol.	10	0
Bojer, Johan. The Power of a Lie	2	6
Bonger, W. A. (See "Modern Criminal Science Series.")
Bosanko, W. Collecting old Lustre Ware	3	0
Bosschere, Jean de. Beasts and Men	12	6
Christmas Tales of Flanders	12	6
Boulenger, Jacques. (See "National History of France.")
Bowen, Courthope H. Froebel and Education by
Self-Activity	5	0
Bowles, M. The Amazing Lady	6	0
Gillette's Marriage	6	0
Bowman, Robert. A Lady of Russia	6	0
Boyesen, Hjalmar Hjorth. A Commentary of the Works of Henrik Ibsen	7	6
Boynton, Henry W. Bret Harte	1	6
Brandes, George. Anatole France	1	6
Ferdinand Lassalle	6	0
Main Currents in Nineteenth Century Literature	5	0
Vol. I. The Emigrant Literature.
Vol. I. The Emigrant Literature, ,, II. The Romantic School in Germany (1873).
,, III. The Reaction in France (1874).
,, IV. Naturalism in England (1875).
,,

Vol. V. The Romantic School in France.
,, VI. Young Germany.
Nietzsche	6	0
Recollections of my Childhood and Youth	10	0
William Shakespeare. A Critical Study	10	0
Breal, Michael. Semantics: Studies in the Science of Meaning	7	6
Breitmann. (See "Leland.")
Brendon, Anthony. The Bonfire	7	0
Bretherton, Ralph. His Young Importance	6	0
Briscoe, Margaret S. Perchance to Dream and other Stories	3	6
Brooke, Emma. Sir Elyot of the Woods	6	0
A Superfluous Woman	6	0
Susan Woo'd and Susan Won	6	0
Transition	6	0
Brown, Goodwin A. Scientific Nutrition Simplified	2	6
Brown, Walter Lee. Manual of Assaying Gold,
Silver, Copper, and Lead Ores	7	6
Bruce, H. Addington. Psychology and Parenthood	7	6
Brunsdon-Fletcher, C. The Problem of the
PacificCloth, 12s. Paper	10	6
Bryant, Louise. Six Red Months in Russia	12	0
Bryant, Marguerite. The Adjustment	6	0
Anne Kempburn, Truth-seeker	6	0
Felicity Crofton	6	0
Buchanan, Robert. Come Live With Me and Be
My Love	2	0
Burgess, Gilbert. The Love Letters of Mr. H. and Miss R. (The Rev. James Hackman and Miss Reay) 1775-1779	5	0
Burmester, Frances G. The Dogs of War	5	0
Burnet, Dr. Etienne. Microbes and Toxins	5	0
Burnett, Frances Hodgson. The Little Hunchback Zia	2	0
The Secret, Garden. Illustrated by Charles
Robinson	6	0
The Shuttle. 6s Cheaper Ed.	4	0
Burniston, Asa, L.C.P. A Common-Sense Algebra
Cloth, 1s. 6d. With Answers	2	0

Butler, Howard Crosby. Architecture and other
Arts (Syria)	24 4	0
Arts (Syria)
Butler, Theobald. Bocheland: Just Before and
During the War	2	6
•
Cahan, A. Yekl! A Tale of the New York Ghetto.
Cloth, 3s. Paper	2	6
Caine, Ralph Hall. Love Songs of English Poets,
1500-1800	3	6
Caine, Sir Hall. The Bondman. 6s. Popular Ed.	3	6
Capt'n. Davy's Honeymoon	2	0
The Last Confession	2	0
The Blind Mother	2	0
The Christian	6	0
The Drama of 365 Days	2	0
The Eternal City. 6sTheatre Ed.	2	0
The Little Manx Nation. Cloth, 3s. 6d. Paper	2	6
The Manxman	6	0
My Story. 6sPopular Ed.	2	0
The Prodigal Son	6	0
The Scapegoat. 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
The White Prophet2 vols, 4s. 1 vol.	6	0
The Woman Thou Gavest Me. 6s. Cheaper Ed.	4	0
Calvert, C. V., B.A. Aventures et Merveilles	2	6
Cambridge, Ada. A Marked Man	3	6
Not All in Vain	1	6
The Hand in the Dark and other Poems	5	0
Campbell, Donald Maclaine. Java: Past and
Present2 vols	36	0
Cannan, Gilbert. Devious Ways	6	0
Carillo, Gomez. Among the Ruins	3	6
Carton, Hugh. The Grand Assize	3	6
Casey, Sadie Katherine. Libby Ann	6	0
Castle, Agnes and Egerton. Our Sentimental	6	0
Garden. Illustrated by Charles Robinson	- 3	6
"Casualty." ContemptibleEach vol.	16	0
Cathedral Cities Series	10	U
by W. W. Collins.
Cathedral Cities of Spain, 60 coloured plates,
Cathedral Cities of Spain, 60 coloured plates,

Cathedral Cities of France, by Herbert and Hester Marshall, 60 coloured plates by Herbert Marshall.
Cather, Willa S. Alexander's Bridges	3	6
O Pioneers!	6	0
My Ántonia	7	0
"Centurion." Gentlemen at Arms	6	0
Challice, Rachel. Spanish Protestants in the 16th
Century	4	6
Chambers, C. Haddon. The Awakening. Cloth,
2s. 6d. Paper	1	6
The Tyranny of Tears. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Paper	1	6
Charles III. of Naples. (See"Baddeley, St. Clair.")
Chartres, Annie Vivanti. Marie Tarnowska	6	0
Chase, Pauline. Peter Pan's Postbag	2	6
Chassevant, Marie. The Chassevant Method of Musical Education.
1st Solfège	1	9
2nd Solfège	2	6
3rd Solfège	3	0
Guide to the Chassevant Method	3	в
I. Teacher's Box of Movable Signs	21	0
Also sold separately at 2s. per 100.
II. Children's Box of Movable Signs	10	6
Also sold separately at 2s. per 100.
III. Keyboard Diagram	2	6
IV. Pavilions and Trees, 6d. per set of 4.
V. Staff Paper, 1d. per piece.
Chaytor, H. J., M.A., and Renault. E., B.A.
French Translation and CompositionCloth	2	0
Key	5	0
Cher, Marie. The Immortal Gymnasts	6	0
Chesnut, Mary Boykin. A Diary from Dixie	10	6
Chester, Edith. Girls and Women	2	6
Chevreuse, Duchesse de. (See "Battifol.")
Chittenden, Russell H., Ph.D., LL.D., Sc.D.
Physiological Economy in Nutrition	14	0
The Nutrition of Man	14	0
Clark, Kate Elizabeth. The Dominant Seventh	2	6
Clarke, Basil. My Round of the War	6	0
Clarke, Violet. Leaves: Essays	5	0

Clay-Clopton Virginia. A Belle of the Fifties Clowes, E. M. On the Wallaby through Victoria.	_	6
Illustrated	6	0
Tract of the Times)	1	0
Cobb, Irvin S. Back Home	6	0
Coleridge, Ernest Hartley. Letters of Samuel
Taylor Coleridge 2 vols.	32	0
The Life and Correspondence of John Duke, Lord Coleridge, Lord Chief Justice of
England2 vols.	30	0
Coleridge, Samuel Taylor. Anima Poetæ. Edited
by E. H. Coleridge	7	6
Collins, Florence. The Luddingtons	6	0
Collins, William F. Mineral Enterprise in China	21	0
Collins, W. W. (See "Cathedral Cities Series.")
Colmore, G. Love for a Key. Cloth, 3s. Paper	2	6
Colomb, Rear-Admiral, and others. The Great
War of 189— i	6	0
Colquhoun, Archibald R. Dan to Beersheba	8	6
Comfort, W. Levington. Red Fleece	5	0
Compayre, Gabriel. Abelard and the Origin and
Early History of Universities	5	0
Compton, C. G. Her Own Devices. Cloth, 3s.
Paper	2	6
Conard, H. S. and Hus, Henri. Waterlilies and
How to Grow Them	2	6
"Confessions." Confessions of an Ambitious
Mother	3	6
Conrad, Joseph. The Nigger of the "Narcissus."
6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
Typhoon and other Stories. 6s. Cheaper Ed.	2	0
Contemporary Men of Letters Each vol.	1	в
Bret Harte, by H. W. Boynton.
Anatole France, by George Brandes.
Walter Pater, by Ferris Greenslet.
Swinburne, by G. E. Woodbury.	0	_
Cook, H. Caldwell. The Play Way	8	6
Cook, Sir Frederick, Bt., Visconte de Monserrate. A Catalogue of Pictures at Doughty
House, Richmond, and elsewhere.

Vol. I. Italian Schools	£6	6	n
, II. Dutch and Flemish Schools
,, III. English, French, early Flemish.	~
	£6	6 ()
or 3 volumes £15 15s.	~0	•	1
Reviews and Appreciations of some Old Italian
Masters	10	()
Cook, Theodore Andrea. Eclipse and O'Kelly	21	(0
Large Paper Ed.	£3	3 (0
Cooper, Clayton Sedgwick. The Brazilians and their Country	12	(6
Corregio, Antonio Allegri Da (See "Ricci.")
Couperus, Louis. Footsteps of Fate. Cloth, 3s. 6d.
Paper	2	(3
The Later Life	6		0
Small Souls	6		Ď
Courtney, W. L. Undine. A Play	2		-
Crackanthorpe, Hubert. Sentimental Studies	6		0
Crackanthorpe, Mrs. B. A. Milly's Story. Cloth,	ŭ
3sPaper	2	(3
Craig, Edward Gordon. On the Art of the Theatre	6	()
Paper, 5s Edition De Luxe	25	()
Crane, Stephen. Maggie	2	()
Pictures of War	1	()
Dalton, Sir Cornelius Neale, K.C.M.G., C.B.,
D.C.L. The Real Captain Kidd	5	()
Danby, Frank. The Sphinx's Lawyer	6	- ()
Dane, Clemence. First the Blade	6	0)
Regiment of Women	5	()
Legend	7	()
D'Annunzio, Gabriele. A Child of Pleasure	3	€	;
The Flame of Life	3	€	5
Francesca da Rimini. 5sPaper	1	6	,
Gioconda. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6	,
The Honeysuckle	3	6	;
The Triumph of Death	3	6	,
The Victim	3	6	,
The Virgins of the Rocks	3	6	,
Dante. (See "Federn.")
Daskein, Mrs. A Desert Rose	6	U
Kerno: A Stone	6	0

Daudet, Ernest. Madame Royale	10	0
Davidson, Thomas. Aristotle and Ancient Educational Ideals	5	0
Rousseau and Education according to Nature	5	0
Davis, Hubert Henry. Cousin Kate. Cloth, 2s. 6d.
Paper	1	6
Lady Epping's Law Suit Cloth, 2s, 6d. Paper	1	6
The Mollusc. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
Mrs. Gorringe's Necklace. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Paper	1	6
A Single Man. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
Davis, Richard Harding. Captain Macklin: His
Memoirs	6	0
In the Fog. 2s. 6dCheaper Ed.	2	0
The King's Jackal	2	0
The Lion and the Unicorn	6	0
Ranson's Folly	6	0
Real Soldiers of Fortune	6	0
Soldiers of Fortune	2	0
Davis, W. S. Armed Peace	10	6
Dawson, A. J. African Nights' Entertainments	6	0
God's Foundling	2	0
The Story of Ronald Kestrel	6	0
Dawson, Sarah Morgan. A Confederate Girl's	6	0
Dawson, Scott, Mrs. C. A. The Burden	6	0
Treasure Trove	6	0
Wastralls	6	0
Against the Grain	7	0
Dearmer, Geoffrey. Poems	2	6
Decle, Lionel. Trooper 3809	6	0
De Garmo, Charles. Herbart and the Herbartians	5	0
Dehan, Richard. Between Two Thieves. 6s.
Cheaper Ed.	4	0
The Cost of Wings	6	0
The Dop Doctor	4	0
Earth to Earth	6	0
Gilded Vanity	5	0
The Headquarter Recruit	6	0
The Man of Iron. 6s	4	0
Off Sandy Hook	6	0
A Sailors' Home	7	0

That Which Hath Wings	7	0
Under the Hermes	6	0
The Eve of Pascua	7	0
De la Mare, Walter. Flora. (See "Bianco.")
Delafield, E. M. The Pelicans	6	0
The War Workers	6	0
Zella Sees Herself	6	0
De Morgan, William. An Affair of Dishonour	6	0
Alice for Short	6	0
It Never Can Happen Again. 2 vols., 10s. 1 vol.	6	0
Joseph Vance	6	0
A Likely Story	6	0
The Old Madhouse	7	0
Somehow Good	6	0
When Ghost Meets Ghost. 2 vols, 10s. 1 vol.	6	0
Dibblee, G. B. Germany's Economic Position and England's Commercial and Industrial Policy
after the War	1	0
Dibbs, Burton. In Summer Isles	3	6
Dicey, Edward. The Egypt of the Future	3	6
Dickinson, H. N. The Business of a Gentleman	6	0
Keddy	6	0
Sir Guy and Lady Rannard	6	0
Dieulafoy, Marcel. Art in Spain and Portugal	10	0
Dimsdale, Marcus S. Latin Literature	6	0
Dino, Duchesse De. Memoirs, 3 vols. Each vol.	10	0
Disbrowe, C. A. A. Records of Stirring Times based upon Unpublished Documents, from
1726-1822	10	0
Dixon, Charles. The Bird Life of London	6	0
Dixon, G. MacNeill. The British Navy at War	1	0
Dixon, Thomas. The Clansman. 6s. Cheaper Ed.	2	0
Dobson, Austin. William Hogarth. 6s	£5 5	0
Donne, John. The Life and Letters of John Donne.
Revised and Collected by Edmund Goose, C.B.
2 vols.	24	0
Dorset, George. Confessions of a Successful Wife	6	0
Dostoevsky, Fyodor, The Works of. Translated by Constance Garnett Each vol.	6	0
The Brothers Karamazov.

The Brothers Karamazov Crime and Punishment.

The Eternal Husband and other Stories.
The Gambler and other Stories.
The House of the Dead.
The Idiot.
The Insulted and Injured.
The Possessed.
A Raw Youth.
White Nights.
An Honest Thief
Dowden, Edward. French Literature	6	0
Dowson, Ernest. A Comedy of Masks	1	6
Dudeney, Mrs. Henry. A Large Room	6	0
Maid's Money	6	0
A Man with a Maid. Cloth, 3sPaper	2	6
The Maternity of Harriott Wicken. 6s.
Cheaper Ed.	1	0
The Orchard Thief. 6sCheaper Ed.	1	0
, Rachel Lorian	6	0
A Runaway Ring. 6sCheaper Ed.	3	0
A Sense of Scarlet and other Stories	3	6
Set to Partners	6	0
Spindle and Plough	6	0
The Story of Susan	3	6
What a Woman Wants	6	0
The Wise Woods	6	0
Dugmore, A. Radclyffe, F.R.G.S. Camera Adventures in the African Wilds, 30s Cheaper Ed.	12	6
Camera and Countryside	5	0
The Romance of the Beaver	6	0
The Romance of the Newfoundland Caribou	12	6
Wild Life and the Camera	6	0
Duhamel, Georges. The New Book of Martyrs	6	0
Dunne, F. P. Mr. Dooley's Opinions	3	6
Mr. Dooley's Philosophy	3	6
Mr. Dooley Says	3	6
Observations by Mr. Dooley	3	6
Mr. Dooley: On Making a Will and other
Necessary Evils	5	0
Dunsany, Lord. Time and the Gods. Illustrated	6	0
Durer, Albrecht. See "Great Engrayers.")

Earle, May. Juana of Castille	5	0
Edgren, H., and Burnett, P. B. The French and
English Word Book. 10s	16	0
Edwards, Osman. Japanese Plays and Playfellows	10	0
Eggleston, George Cary. The History of the Confederate War; Its Canses and its Conduct
2 vols.	15	0
Elers, George. Memoirs of George Elers	12	0
Ellwanger, George H. The Garden's Story	5	0
Ellwanger, H. B. The Pleasures of the Table The Rose	12	0
Elson, Robert. The Magnate	6	0
Ely, Richard T., Ph.D. The Labour Movement in	U	U
America	5	0
Encyclopædia of Sport and Games4 vols.	J	v
Cloth, £3 3s. Half Leather.	£ 3 12	7 0
Erichsen, Erich. Forced to Fight for the Huns	2	6
Escoffier, A. A Guide to Modern Cookery	12	6
Evans, C. S. Our Glorious Heritage. 1s. School Ed.	1	0
Cinderella. Illustrated by Arthur Rackham	7	6
Evans, E. P. Animal Symbolism in Ecclesiastical		Ť
Architecture	9	0
The Criminal Prosecution and Capital Punishment of Animals	7	6
Evolutional Ethics and Animal Psychology	9	0
Evans-Gordon, Sir W. The Alien Immigrant	6	0
Ex-Lieutenant of General de Villebois-Mareuil, An. Ten Months in the Field with the Boers	3	6
EANW ! E
F.A.N.Y. in France and Belgium, A. Nursing
Adventures	3	6
Farrar, F. W., D.D., F.R.S. The Passion Play at
Oberammergau	2	6
Federn, Karl. Dante and His Time	7 6	6
Feldmann, Constantine. The Revolt of the	О	U
"Potemkin"	6	0
Fenellosa, Ernest Francisco. Epochs of Chinese	U	v
Fenellosa, Ernest Francisco. Epochs of Chinese and Japanese Art	36	0
Fenellosa, Mary. Blossoms from a Japanese
Garden	5	0

Fenwick, E., M.A., L.L.D. Geometry for Schools Ferrero, Guglielmo. The Greatness and Decline	1	6
of Rome5 vols. The set	30	0
Vol. I. The Empire Builders, 450-59 B.C.	•	•
FT T 11 CI TO 44
,, II. Julius Cæsar, 58-44 B.C.
,, III., The Fall of an Aristocracy,
44-37 B.C.
,, IV. Rome and Egypt, 37-22 B.C.
77 (71) 73 131 (14) 04
,, V. The Republic of Augustus, 21 B.C.
Ferruggia, Gemma. Woman's Folly. Translated
by Helen Zimmern. Cloth, 3s. 6d. Paper	2	6
Filon, Augustin. The Prince Imperial, 1856-1879	15	0
Fitch, Sir Joshua. Thomas and Matthew Arnold	-
	_	0
and their Influence on English Education	5	0
Fitzmaurice-Kelly, James. Spanish Literature	б	0
Fitzpatrick, Sir J. The Outspan. Tales of South
Africa	3	6
The Transvaal from Within, 10s, Popular Ed.	2	6
Flandrau, Charles. The Diary of a Freshman	4	0
Flandrau, Charles. The Diaty of a Fleshman	4	U,
Fleming, Mrs. J. M. (Alice M. Kipling). A		1
Pinchbeck Goddess	1	6
Fletcher, Byers, Drifting with Browne	6	0
"Foemina." The English Soul	6	0
For Her Sex. Extracts from a Girl's Diary	2	o
Full lief Sex. Extracts from a Child December.	-	-
Fothergill, Jessie. Oriole's Daughter	1	6
Fragonard. (See "Great Engravers.") France, Anatole. (See "Contemporary Men of Letters.")
Franzos, Emil. The Chief Justice. Cloth 3s. 6d.
Paper	2	6
•		-
Fraser, Lovat. India under Curzon and After	16	0
Frederic, Harold. The Copperhead and other
Stories of the North during the American War	3	6
Gloria Mundi	2	0
Pomps and Vanities	1	Ú.
Cros Dighard Cover Veges Hand	_	-
Free, Richard. Seven Years Hard	5	0
Freemantle, E. Comrades Two	4	0
French Artists of our DayEach vol.	3	6
Gustave Courbet, by Léonce Bénédite.
Gustave Courbet, by Léonce Bénédite. Edouard Manet, by Louis Hourticq.
Puvis de Chavannes, by André Michel.
, ,

Frenilly, Baron de. Recollections of Baron de
Frenilly, Peer of France (1768-1828)	10	0
Fried, A. H. The Diary of a Condemned Man	2	6
Friedberg, Rev. S., B.A. Joshua	5	0
Frohman, Daniel. Memoirs of a Manager	5	0
Funck-Brentano, Fr. (See "National History of France.")
Furtwaengler, Adolf. Masterpieces of Greek
Sculpture	£3 3	0
Fyfe, Hamilton. The Real Mexico	6	0
Gainsborough. (See "Armstrong.")
Gallatin, James. A Great Peacemaker. (The Diary of James Gallatin.) 10sPopular Ed.	5	0
Galsworthy, John. Another Sheaf. Essays	6	0
Saints' Progress	7	0
Beyond		0
The Country House. 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
The Dark Flower. 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
Five Tales	6	0
Fraternity. 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
The Freelands	6	0
The Patrician. 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
The Inn of Tranquillity. Essays	6	0
The Island Pharisees, 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
The Man of Property. 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
A Justification of the Censorship of Plays	0	6
The Little Man and other Satires	6	0
Memories	6	0
Moods, Songs and Doggerels	5	0
A Motley. Essays	6	0
A Sheaf. Essays	6	0
Lectures and Addresses	5	0
Gardiner, E. A., M.A., F.C.S. A First Year Course
in General Science	3	6
Garland, Hamlin. Her Mountain Lover	4	0
Garner, Professor R. L. The Speech of Monkeys	7	6
Garnett, Olive. Petersburg Tales	6	0
Garnett Richard, LL.D., and Gosse, Edmund,
C.B., LL.D. English Literature, In 4 vols.
£44s. Half Leather	£5 5	0

Garnett, Richard. Essays of an Ex-Librarian	7	6
Italian Literature	6	0
Garofalo, R. (See "Modern Criminal Science Series."
Gaulot, Paul. A Friend of the Queen (Marie
Antoinette—Count Fersen)	6	0
Gauss, Professor Christian. The German
Emperor	6	0
"General Staff." The Writing on the Wall	3	6
Gerrare, Wirt. Greater Russia: The Continental
Empire of the Old World	10	0
Ghosh, A. Sarath Kumar. 1,001 Indian Nights	5	0
Gibbs, Philip. The Battles of the Somme	6	0
From Bapaume to Passchendaele	6	0
Open Warfare	10	6
The Soul of the War. Cloth, 3s. 6dPaper	2	6
Realities of War	10	6
The Street of Adventure	2	0
Gilchrist, R. Murray. Beggar's Manor	6	0
The Courtesy Dame	6	0
Passion the Plaything	6	0
Giles, Herbert. Spanish Literature	6	0
Gjellerup, Karl. Minna	6	0
The Pilgrim Kamanita	6	0
Glasgow, Ellen. Virginia	6	0
Goad, Harold Elsdale. The Kingdom	6	0
Gobineau, Arthur, Count. The Renaissance	10	0
Goethe, Wolfgang von. Wilhelm Meister's Theatrical Mission	6	0
Goldie, Mrs. Henrietta. The Veiled Life	6	0
Goldie, V. The Declension of Henry D'Albiac	6	0
The Happy Garret	5	0
Majorie Stevens. 6sCheaper Ed.	3	Ű
Nigel Thomson	6	0
Golm, Rudolph. The old Adam and the New Eve Cloth, 3s, 6d. Paper	2	c
	ప	6
Gontcharoff, Ivan. A Common Story. Translated by Constance Garnett. 3s. 6d. Popular Ed.	2	0
Gorki, Maxim. The Orloff Couple and Malva	3	6
(See "Illustrated Cameos of Literature.")	O	O
(See Hittstrated Cameos of Enteractive.)

Gosse, Edmund, C.B. The Autumn Garden Collected Essays	5	0
Vol. I. Seventeenth Century Studies.
,, II. Gossip in a Library.
,, III. Critical Kit-Kats.
IV. French Profiles.
,, V. Portraits and Sketches.
., VI. Inter Arma. Essays written in Time of War.
Some Diversions of a Man of Letters	7	6
Collected Poems	5	0
English Literature. (See under "Garnett.")		•
Father and Son. Cloth, 3s. Leather, 4s. 6d.
Illustrated	7	6
Firdausi in Exile and other Poems	3	6
Hypolympia, or the Gods in the Island	5	ō
In Russet and Silver.	6	0
King Erik	5	0
Modern English Literature	7	6
The Naturalist on the Sea Shore	6	0
On Viol and Flute	3	6
Questions at Issue	25	0
The Secret of Narcisse, 5sPopular Ed.	2	6
Three French Moralists and the Gallantry of	~	O
France	6	0
(See also "Literatures of the World.")
Gouvrieux, Marc. With Wings Outspread	5	0
Goya, Francisco. (See "Great Engravers.")
Graham, John. The Great God Success	4	0
Grahame, R. B. Cunninghame. Hernando de Soto	5	0
A Vanished Arcadia	9	0
The Life and Miracles of Antonio Conselheiro	10	6
Grand, Sarah. Adnam's Orchard, 6s. Cheaper Ed.	3	6
The Beth Book	3	6
The Heavenly Twins	6	-
Our Manifold Nature. 6sPopular Ed.	3	-
The Tenor and the Boy	1	•
The Winged Victory	6	0
Grant, W. L. A History of Canada	2
Gras, Felix. Reds of the Midi	1	-
The Terror	_	_
	6 6	_
The White Terror	b	0

Graves, Robert. Fairies and Fusiliers	3	0
Gray, Maxwell. The Forest Chapel and other
Poems	6	0
Four-Leaved Clover	6	6
The House of Hidden Treasure		0
The Last Sentence. 6s	2	0
Richard Rosny	6	0
Sweethearts and Friends	6	0
The World's Mercy and Other Tales	6	0
Great Education SeriesEach vol.	5	0
Fræbel and Education by Self-Activity, by H. Courthorpe Bowen.
Abelard and the Origin and Early History of Universities, by Gabriel Compayré.
Aristotle and Ancient Educational Ideals, by Thomas Davidson.
Rousseau and Education According to Nature,
by Thomas Davidson.
Herbart and the Herbartians, by Charles de Garmo.
Thomas and Matthew Arnold and their Influence on English Education, by Sir
Joshua Fitch.
Horace Mann and the Common School
Revival in the United States, by B. A.
Hinsdale.
Loyola and the Educational System of the Jesuits, by Rev. Thomas Hughes.
Pestalozzi and the Foundation of the Modern Elementary School, by A. Pinloche.
Alcuin and the Rise of the Christian Schools,
by Andrew Fleming West.
Great Engravers, The	2	6
Bartolozzi. Andrea Mantegna.	~	U
Albrecht Durer. Marcantonio.
Fragonard. John Raphael Smith.
Francisco Goya. Rembrandt.
Hans Holbein. Van Dyck. Hogarth. Watteau, Boucher.
Greenslet, Ferris. Walter Pater	1	G
Gregory, Sacha. Yellow Leaf	7	6
diegory, Sacha. Tenow Lear	•	U

Griffiths, A. B., Ph.D., F.R.S.E., F.C.S. A Manual of Bacteriology	5	0
Grondys, L. H., Ph.D. The Germans in Belgium	1	0
Gross, Hans. (See "Modern Criminal Science Series.")
Grosvenor, Caroline. Bands of Orion	6	0
Laura	6	0
Gulick, H. Luther, M.D. The Efficient Life	3	6
Guyau, Marie Jean. The Non-Religion of the Future	17	0
Gyp. Little Bob	2	6
•
Haddon-Chambers, C. The Saving Grace	5	0
The Awakening. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
The Tyranny of Tears. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Paper	1	6
Hall, Gertrude. The Truth about Camilla	Ü	0
Verses	3	6
Hamilton, Clive. Spirits in Bondage	3	6
Hamilton, Cosmo. Duke's Son	6	0
Hamilton, Mary A. Yes	6	0
Less than the Dust	6	0
Hamilton, Meredith. Across an Ulster Bog.
Cloth, 3sPaper	2	6
The Freedom of Henry Meredyth	6	0
Hamilton, Myra. Kingdoms Curious. Illustrated by Arthur Rackham and others	- 5	0
The Pinero Birthday Book	2	6
Hammer, S. C. William II	5	0
Handasyde. The Four Gardens. Illustrated by
Charles Robinson	6	0
Hansel, C. W., B.S.C. Introductory Electricity and
Magnetism	4	6
Hare, Augustus, J. C. The Cities of Southern Italy	5	0
Sicily	3	0
Harris, Major-General J. T. China Jim	3	6
Harrison, Frederick. The Positive Evolution of Religion	8	6
Harte, Bret. (See "Contemporary Men of Letters.")
Hartleben, O. E. Love's Carnival Cloth, 2s. 6d.
Paper	1	6

Hartley, M. Beyond Man's Strength	3	0
Haskin, F. J. The Panama Canal	6	0
Hauptmann, Gerhart. Hannele. Cloth, 2s. 6d.
Paper	1	6
Lonely Lives. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
The Sunken Bell. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
The Weavers. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
Hayward, Rachel. The Hippodrome	6	0
Letters from Là Bas	6	0
Hearn, Lafcadio. Interpretations of Literature	90	0
2 vols.		0
Appreciations of Poetry Heath, W. Shaw. Woman Guides	19 5	0
Heaton, Aldam. Beauty and Art	6 6	0
Heijermans, Herman. The Ghetto. Cloth, 2s. 6d.	U	U
Paper	1	6
Heine, Heinrich. Works. 12 volsEach vol.	_	0
I. Florentine Nights: The Memoirs of Herr		Ü von Schnabelewopski; The Rabbi of Bacharach; and Shakespeare's Maidens and Women.
II. and III. Pictures of Travel.
IV. The Salon; Letters on Art, Music, Popular
Life, and Politics.
V. and VI. Germany.
VII. and VIII. French Affairs and Lutetia.
IX. The Book of Songs.
X. New Poems.
XI. Germany; Romancero, Books 1 and 2.
XII. Romancero. Book 3. Last Poems.
Poems. 4 vols. Cheaper Ed. Each vol.,		e
Cloth, 2s. 6dLeather	3	6
I. The Book of Songs. II. New Poems.
III. Germany. Romancero, Books 1 and 2.
IV. Romancero, Books 3 and 4. Last Poems.
The Memoirs of Heinrich Heine	12	0
THE MOREOUS OF HERMITON, HORE	1~	U
HEINEMANN'S FAVOURITE CLASSICS.
Addison, Joseph. Selected Essays. Cloth, 1s.
Leather	2	0

Arnold, Matthew. Selected Poems. 2 vols. Each	2	0
vol., Cloth, 1s Leather	2	0
Bronte Emily. Poems. Cloth, 1sLeather	ئة	U
Browning, Robert. Pippa Passes. Cloth, 1s.	0	^
Leather	2	0
Coleridge, S. T. Poems. Cloth, 1sLeather	2	0
Dickens, Charles. A Christmas Carol. Cloth, 1s.	0	0
Leather The Cricket on the Hearth. Cloth, 1s. Leather	2 2	0
Fitzgerald, Edward. The Rubáiyát of Omar	~	U
Khayyam. Cloth, 1sLeather	2	0
Goldsmith, Oliver. The Traveller and the Deserted	~	0
Village. Cloth, 1sLeather	2	0
Lamb, Charles. The Essays of Elia. 2 vols.	~	0
Each vol., Cloth, 1sLeather	2	0
Longfellow, Henry Wadsworth. Evangeline.	~	U
Cloth, 1sLeather	2	0
Macaulay Lord Fessys 4 vols Fach vol	4	U
Macaulay, Lord. Essays. 4 vols. Each vol. Cloth, 1s Leather	2	0
The Lays of Ancient Rome, Cloth 1s. Leather	2	0
Milton, John. Shorter Poems. Cloth, 1s. Leather	2	0
Poe, Edgar Allan. Lyrical Poems. Cloth, 1s.
Leather	2	0
Ruskin, John. Sesame and Lilies. Cloth, 1s.
Leather	2	0
Scott, Sir Walter, The Lady of the Lake. Cloth,	~
1s. Leather	2	0
Shakespeare, William. Works. 40 vols. Each	~
vol., Cloth, 1sLeather	9	0
All's Well That Ends Well. King Lear.	~	U
Antony and Cleopatra. King Richard II.
As You Like It. King Richard III.
The Comedy of Errors. Love's Labour Lost.
•
King Henry IV. 2 vols. Merry Wives of Windsor.
King Henry V. Midsummer Night's
King Henry VI. 3 vols. Dream.
King Henry VIII. Much Ado about No-King John. thing.

	itus Andronicus.
	roilus and Cressida.
	welfth Night.
	wo Gentlemen of
Taming of the Shrew.	Verona.
	enus and Adonis.
	'he Winter's Tale.
Sheridan, R. B. Plays. 3 v		2	0
The Critic.	Deather	۵	U
The School for Scandal	1
The Rivals.	•
Tennyson, Alfred, Lord.	Poems. Each vol.,	2	0
Early Poems.		_	U
English Idylls and other	er Poems.
Idylls of the King. (2
The Princess.	. 525.7
In Memoriam.
Maud and other Poem	s.
Helm, W. H. Studies in St	yle	3	0
Helmolt, Dr. H. F. The W	orld's History. 8 vols.
Each vol., Cloth, 15s	Half Morocco	21	0
Helston, John. Aphrodite	and other Poems	5	0
Henley, W. E. The Letters	s of Lord Byron	5	0
Henley, W. E., and Steve
Separately, Cloth, 2s. 6d. Admiral Guinea.	Paper, 1s. 6d. In 1 vol.	6	0
Beau Austin.
Deacon Brodie, or the	Double Life
Macaire.	Double Life.
Herbertson, J. L. Borrow	ers of Fortune	6	0
•		6	0
Herder, Alexandra von. J		5	0
Hergesheimer, Joseph. Ja	ava Head	7	ŏ
	ys	7	0
Gold and Iron	•	7	0
Hero Readers' Series	Each vol.	1	6
British Sailor Heroes.
British Soldier Heroes.
Herriot, Edouard. Madan	ie Récamier2 vols.	20	0

Hewlett, Maurice. The Fool Errant. 6s. Cheaper
Ed.	3	6
The Little Iliad	6	0
Pan and the Young Shepherd. Pastoral in 2
Acts. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
The Song of the Plow	6	0
Hichens, Robert. Bella Donna. 6s. Cheaper Ed.	4	0
Flames	2	0
The Folly of Eustace	6	0
An Imaginative Man. 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
The Londoners	2	0
Hilliers, Ashton. Memoirs of a Person of Quality	6	0
Hincks, Marcella Azra. The Japanese Dance	2	0
Hinde, Sidney and Hildegarde. The Last of the
Masai. Illustrated	15	0
Hindsdale, B. A. Horace Mann and the Common
School Revival in the United States	5	0
Hirsch, Dr. William. Genius and Degeneration	17	0
Hogarth. (See "Great Engravers.")
(See "Dobson, Austin.")
Holbein, Hans (The Younger). (See "Great Engravers.")
Holdsworth, A. E. The Gods Arrive	6	0
Joanna Traill, Spinster. Cloth, 3sPaper	2	6
Holiday, Henry. Reminiscences of My Life	16	0
Hollopeter, W. C., M.D. Hay fever and its Successful Treatment	3	6
Holstein, Alexandra, de and Montefiore, Dora B.
Serf Life in Russia	3	6
"Home Counties." A Free Farmer in a Free
State. Illustrated	6	0
How to Build or Buy a Country Cottage and
Fit it Up	6	0
War Time and Peace in Holland	6	0
Hope, Laurence. The Garden of Kama. 5s	£1 1	0
(See "Under Byam Shaw.")	_
Indian Love	5 5	0
	2	6
Hopper, James and Bechdolt, Fred R. "9009."	_	0
Hough, E. The Girl at the Halfway House	4	-
Hourticq, Louis. Art in France	10	0
Edouard Manet	3	6

Housman, Laurence. The Heart of Peace	5	0
Hovey, Carl. The Life Story of J. Pierpont
Morgan	7	6
Huart, Clement. Arabic Literature	6	0
Hughes, Rev. Thomas. Loyola and the Educational System of the Jesuits	5	0
Humieres, Vicomte Robert d'. Through Isle
and Empire	6	0
Hungerford, Mrs. The Hoyden	2	0
Hunt, Violet. Tales of the Uneasy	6	0
White Rose of Weary Leaf	6	0
The Wife of Altamont	6	0
Hutten, Baroness Von. Mrs. Drummond's Vocation. (Her Russian Lover.) 6sCheaper Ed.	1	0
Our Lady of the Beeches. 6s Cheaper Ed.	2	0
Pam. 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
What Became of Pam. 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
(
Ibsen, Henrik. Collected Works. Edited by
William ArcherEach vol.	5	0
I. Lady Inger of Ostrat. The Feast at Solhoug. Love's Comedy.
II. The Vikings at Helegeland. The Pretenders.
III. Brand.
IV. Peer Gynt. A Dramatic Poem.
V. Emperor and Galilean.
VI. The League of Youth. Pillars of Society.
VII. A Doll's House. Ghosts.
VIII. An Enemy of the People. The Wild
Duck.
IX. Rosmersholm. The Lady from the Sea.
X. Hedda Gabler. The Master Builder.
XI. Little Eyolf. John Gabriel Borkman.
When We Dead Awaken.
XII. From Ibsen's Workshop.
		0
GhostsPaper	1
John Gabriel Borkman. 5s	1	_
Little Eyolf. 5sPaper	1	6
When We Dead Awaken. Cloth, 2s. 6d.	1	e
(See "Boyesen and Jæger.")	1	6
(Dec Doyeson and sæget.)

Illustrated Cameos of LiteratureEach vol.	1	6
Richard Wagner as Poet, by Wolfgang Golther.
Aristotle, by Fritz Manthner.
Maxim Gorki, by Hans Ostwald.
Imbert-Terry, Sir H. M. A Misjudged Monarch
(Charles II.)	15	0
International Society of Sculptors, Painters and Gravers. Catalogue of the Exhibition of International Art, Knightsbridge, 1898	3	6
Irving, H. B. Studies of French Criminals of the Nineteenth Century	10	0
Irving, Sir Henry. The Drama	3	6
(See also under "Stoker, Bram.")
Iwan-Müller, E. B. Lord Milner and South Africa	15	0
Jacob, Violet. The Golden Heart and other Fairy
StoriesIllustrated	5	0
The Sheep Stealers	6	0
Verses	3	6
Jacobsen, J. P. Siren Voices. Cloth, 3s. 6d. Paper	2	6
Jacomb, Agnes E. Esther	6	0
Jaeger, Henrik. The Life of Henrik Ibsen	6	0
James, Henry. The Awkward Age	б	0
Embarrassments	6	0
English Hours. Illustrated by Joseph Pennell	10	0
Italian Hours. Illustrated by Joseph Pennell	25	0
A Little Tour in France. Illustrated by
Joseph Pennell	6	0
The Other House	6	0
The Spoils of Poynton	G	0
Terminations	6	0
The Two Magics	6	0
What Maisie Knew	6	0
James, Lionel. The Indian Frontier War	7	6
Jesse, F. Tennyson. Beggars on Horseback	6	0
The Milky Way. 6s Cheaper Ed.	2	0
Secret Bread	6	_
The Sword of Deborah	3	6
The Happy Bride and other Poems	5	0
Jessen, Franzde. Katya: A Romance of Russia	6	0

Job, H. K. Among the Water Fowl: Observation,
Adventure, Photography	5	0
Johnson, Owen. The Sixty-First Second	6	0
Jones, R. H., M.Sc., F.C.S. Experimental
Domestic Science	2	6
Juta, Réné. : The Tavern	7	0
Kahn, A. The Life of General Joffre	1	0
Kasbeck. His Highness Sandro	4	0
Keary, E. M. Catalogue of the Accademia delle
Belle Arti, Venice. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	2	0
Keating, Joseph. The Perfect Wife	6	0
Kellerman, Annette. How to Swim	7	6
Physical Beauty	7	6
Kennard, Lady. A Roumanian Diary	5	0
Kennedy, Walker. In the Dwellings of Silence	6	0
Kimball, Arthur L. The Physical Properties of Gases	5	0
Kirby, A. M. Daffodils, Narcissus	2	6
Knight, William, and Oliphant, T. T. Stories of
Golf	2	6
Kraszewski, Joseph. The Jew. Cloth, 3s. 6d.
Paper	2	6
Kroeker, R. F. A Century of German Lyrics	3	6
Kropotkin, Prince Peter. Mutual Aid	2	0
Lait, Jack. Beef, Iron and Wine	3	6
Lalau. Maurice. Grandmother's Fairy Tales.
Illustrated in Colour by Maurice Lalau	6	0
Landon, Perceval. Raw Edges	6	0
Landor, Savage A. H. Corea, or Cho-Sen, the
Land of the Morning Calm	18	0
In the Forbidden Land. An Account of a
Journey in Tibet. 7s. 6dPopular Ed.	3	6
Lane, E. Macartney. Nancy Stair	2	0
Langer, Angela Rue and Roses	5	9
Langton, Lionel. The Fall of Lord Paddockslea	6	0
Lankester, Sir E. Ray, K.C.B. Natural Science and the Classical System in Education	2	6
Science and Education	1	6
Lassalle, Ferdinand. (See "Brandes.")
Launay I. de. The World's Gold	6	0

Laurel Crowned Letters Each vol.	1	6
The Best Letters of William Cowper.
The Best Letters of Charles Lamb.
The Best Letters of Lady Mary Wortley
Montagu.
The Best Letters of P. B. Shelley.
The Best Letters of Horace Walpole.
Laut, A. C. Lords of the North	4	0
Lawson, Thomas W. Friday the 13th	4	0
Leary, E. P. With the New Zealanders in Samoa	6	0
Leathes, Stanley, C.B., M.A Each vol.	3	6
Vol I. The People in the Making.
,, II. The People in Adventure.
,, III. The People on its Trial. (Shortly.)
Le Caron, Major Henri. Twenty-five Years in the Secret Service. Illustrated, 14s. Cheaper
Edition, 3s. 6dBoards	2	6
Le Goffic, Charles. The Epic of Dixmude	3	6
Lee, Vernon. Vanitas	5	0
Lee-Hamilton, E. Mimma Bella	5	0
Leland, Charles Godfrey. Memories of Charles
Godfrey Leland (Hans Breitmann)	7	6
Lemaître, Jules. Jean Jacques Rousseau	10	0
Lemoisne, P. A. Degas	3	6
Lenotre, G. The Flight of Marie Antoinette. 10s.
Popular Ed.	5	0
A Gascon Royalist in Revolutionary Paris.
10sPopular Ed.	5	0
The Last Days of Marie Antoinette. 10s.
Popular Ed.	5	0
The Tribunal of the Terror. 10s. Popular Ed.	5	0
Leroy-Beaulieu, Anatole. Israel among the
Nations	7	6
Leveson-Gower, George. Poems	7	6
Levick, Dr. G. Murray. Antarctic Penguins	6	0
Lewin, Evans. The German Road to the East	7	6
Lewis, Caroline. Clara in Blunderland	2	6.
	2	6
	6	0
Lie Longs The Commodore's Daughter Cloth	Ť	•
38. 6d. Paper	2	6.
Lewin, Evans. The German Road to the East	7 2 2 6	6 6 6 0

Hughes. Cloth, 3s. 6dPaper		6
Niobe. Cloth, 3s. 6d	2	6
Lintier, Paul. My .75	3	6
Linton, Lynn. In Haste and at Leisure	6	0
Literatures of the World. Edited by Edmund
Gosse, C.B., LL.D Each vol.	6	0
Japanese Literature, by W. G. Aston.
French Literature, by Edward Dowden.
Spanish Literature, by J. Fitzmaurice-Kelly.
Italian Literature, by Richard Garnett.
Chinese Literature, by Herbert Giles.
Modern English Literature, by Edmund Gosse.
Arabic Literature, by Clément Huart.
Bohemian Literature, by Count Francis Lutzow.
Sanskrit Literature, by A. A. Macdonnell.
Ancient Greek Literature, by Gilbert Murray.
Hungarian Literature, by Frederick Riedl.
German Literature, by Calvin Thomas.
American Literature, by W. P. Trent.
Russian Literature, by R. Waliszewski.
Latin Literature, by Marcus S. Dimsdale.
Little, A. J. Mount Omi and Beyond	10	0
Little, Mrs. Archibald. A Marriage in China	3	6
Littman, Enno. Semitic Inscriptions	£2 2	0
Liveing, Edward. Attack	1	6
Lloyd, Nelson. The Chronic Loafer	4	0
A Drone and a Dreamer	4	0
Lodge, George Cabot. Poems and Dramas. 2 vols.	10	0
Loeb Classical Library. Paper, 6s. Cloth, 7s. 6d.
Leather	10	0
$Latin\ Authors.$
Apuleius: The Golden Ass. (Metamorphoses.) W. Adlington (1566). Revised by S. Gaselee.
Ausonius. Translated by H. G. Evelyn-
White. 2 vols. Vol. I.
Boethius: Tracts and De Consolationis
Philosophiæ, Translated by Rev. H. F.
Stewart and H. K. Rand.
Caesar: Civil Wars. Translated by A. G.
Peskett.

Caesar: The Gallic War. Translated by H. J. Edwards,

Catullus. Translated by F. W. Cornish. Tibullus. Translated by J. P. Postgate; and Pervigilium Veneris. Translated by J. W. Mackail.

Cicero: De Finibus. Translated by H. Rack-ham.

Cicero: De Officiis, Translated by Walter Miller.

Cicero: Letters to Atticus. Translated by E. O. Winstedt. 3 vols. Vols. I and II.

Confessions of St. Augustine. Translation by W. Watts (1631). 2 vols.

Fronto. Translated by C. R. Haines. 2 vols. Vol. I.

Horace: Odes and Epodes, Translated by C. E. Bennett

Juvenal and Persius. Translated by G. G. Ramsay

Livy. Translated by B. O. Foster. 13 vols. Vol. I.

Ovid: Heroides and Amores. Translated by Grant Showerman.

Ovid: Metamorphoses. Translated by F. J. Miller. 2 vols.

Petronius. Translated by M. Heseltine; and Seneca: Apocolocyntosis. Translated by W. H. D. Rouse.

Plautus. Translated by Paul Nixon. 5 vols. Vols. I and 11.

Pliny: Letters. Melmoth's Translation revised by W. M. L. Hutchinson. 2 vols. Propertius. Translated by H. E. Butler.

Seneca: Epistulæ Morales. Translated by R. M. Gummere. 3 vols. Vol. I.

Seneca: Tragedies. Translated by F. J. Miller. 2 vols.

Suetonius. Translated by J. C. Rolfe. 2 vols. Tacitus: Dialogus. Translated by Sir Wm. Peterson; and Agricola and Germania Translated by Maurice Hutton Terence. Translated by John Sargeaunt. 2 vols.

Virgil. Translated by H. R. Fairclough. 2 vols.

Greek Authors.

Achilles Tatius. Translated by S. Gaselee.

Aeschines. Translated by C. D. Adams.

Apollonius Rhodius. Translated by R. C. Seaton.

The Apostolic Fathers. Translated by Kirsopp Lake. 2 vols.

Appian's Roman History. Translated by Horace White. 4 vols.

Clement of Alexandria. Translated by the Rev. S. W. Butterworth.

Daphnis and Chloe. Thornley's Translation revised by J. M. Edmonds; and Parthenius. Translated by S. Gaselee.

Dio Cassius: Roman History. Translated by E. Cary. 9 vols. Vols. I-VI.

Euripides. Translated by A. S. Way. 4 vols. Vols. I, III and IV 2nd Imp.; Vol. II 3rd Imp.

Galen: On the Natural Faculties. Translated by A. J. Brock.

The Greek Anthology. Translated by W. R. Paton. 5 vols.

The Greek Bucolic Poets (Theocritus, Bion, Moschus). Translated by J. M. Edmonds.

Hesiod and The Homeric Hymns. Translated by H. G. Evelyn-White

Homer: Odyssey. Translated by A. T. Murray. 2 vols. Vols. I. and II.

Julian. Translated by Wilmer Cave Wright. 3 vols. Vols. I and II.

Lucian. Translated by A. M. Harmon. 7 vols. Vols. I and II.

Marcus Aurelius. Translated by C. R. Haines. Martial. Translated by W. C. Ker. 2 vols.

Vol. I.

Pausanias: Description of Greece. Translated by W. H. S. Jones. 5 vols. and companion volume. Vol. I.
Philostratus: The Life of Appollonius of Tyana. Translated by F. C. Conybeare. 2 vols.
Pindar. Translated by Sir J. E. Sandys.
Plato: Euthyphro, Apology, Crito, Phaedo,
Phaedrus. Translated by H. M. Fowler.
Plutarch: The Parallel Lives. Translated by
B. Perrin. Vols. I-VIII.
Procopius: History of the Wars. Translated by H. B. Dewing, 7 vols. Vols. I, II and III.
Quintus Smyrnaeus. Translated by A. S. Way.
Sophocles. Translated by F. Storr. 2 vols.
St. John Damascene: Barlaam and Ioasaph.
Translated by the Rev. G. R. Woodward and Harold Mattingl
Strabo's Geography. Translated by H. L.
Jones. 8 vols. Vol. I.
Theophrastus: Enquiry into Plants. Translated by Sir Arthur Hort, Bart. 2 vols.
Thucydides. Translated by C. F. Smith. 4
vols. Vol. I.
Xenophon: Cyropaedia. Translated by
Walter Miller. 2 vols.
Xenophon: Hellenica. Translated by C. L.
Brownson. 2 vols. Vol I.
Logio, G. Clenton. Bulgaria. Cloth, 10sPaper	8	6
Lombrosa, C. (See "Modern Criminal Science Series.")
London, Jack. Burning Daylight. 6s. Cheaper Ed.	2	0
The Call of the Wild. 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
Faith of Men	2	0
The Game. 6s	2	0
Martin Eden. 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
Moon-Face. 6s	2	0
The Sea Wolf, 6sCheaper Ed.	2	()
Tales of the Fish Patrol. 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
Lorimer, Norma. Catherine Stirling	6	0
Loup, Maximilian de. The American Salad Book	2	6

Low, Ivy. Growing Pains	6	0
Lowndes, Mrs. Belloc. Barbara Rebell	6	0
The Heart of Penelope	6	0
Jane Oglander	6	0
The Pulse of Life	6	0
Studies in Wives	6	0
The Uttermost Farthing When No Man Pursueth	2	6
Lowry, H. D. Wreckers and Methodists and other	6	U
Stories	3	6
Luck, Mrs. Brian. The Belgian Cook Book	ລ	6
Lutzow, Count Francis. See "Literatures of the	~	U
World."	6	0
Lytton, Lady Constance. Prison and Prisoners	3	6
MacCurdy, J. T., M.D. The Psychology of War	2	6
MacDonnell, Arthur A. See "Literatures of the		Ī
World."	_
MacFarlan, Alexander. Mockery	6	0
The Inscrutable Lovers	7	0
Macleod, Fiona (William Sharp). Collected Works, 7 vols	6	0
I. Pharais: The Mountain Lovers.	U	U
II. The Sin Eater: The Washer of the Ford and other Legendary Moralities.
III. The Dominion of Dreams: Under the Dark Star.
IV. The Divine Adventure: Iona: Studies in Spiritual History.
V. The Winged Destiny: Studies on the Spiritual History of the Gael.
VI. The Silence of Amor: Where the Forest
Murmurs.
VII. Poems and Dramas.	_	_
From the Hills of Dreams,	5 5	0
Poems and Dramas	Э	U
Macnaughten-Jones H M.D., M.C.N., Q.V.I., etc.	0	0
Ambidexterity and Mental Culture	2	6
Madelin, Louis. (See "National History of France.")
Malloch, George Reston. Poems and Lyrics	3	6

Malot, Hector. Her Own Folk	3	6
Mantegna, Andrea. (See "Great Engravers.")
Marcantonio. (See "Great Engravers.")
Margueritte, V. Frontiers of the Heart6s.	2	0
Marie Antoinette. (See "Gaulot" and	4	U
"Lenotre.")
Marie De La Grange. D'Arquien, Queen of Poland. (See "Waliszewski, K.")
Marnan, Basil. A Daughter of the Veldt	6	0
Marriage, Caroline. The Luck of the Barerakes	6	0
Marsden, R. W. Hints on the Management of Commoner Infections	3	6
Marshall, Herbert. (See "Cathedral Cities Series.")
Marshall, Robert. His Excellency the Governor.
Cloth, 2s. 6d	1	6
Masefield, John. Reynard the Fox: A Poem	5	0
The Daffodil Fields: A Poem	5	0
Danber: A Poem	5	0
The Faithful: A Play	5	0
Good Friday: A Play in Verse	5	0
Lollingdon Downs and other Poems, with		,
Sonnets	5	0
Philip the King and other Poems	5	0
A Poem and Two Plays	5	0
The Old Front Line	3	6
The Battle of the Somme. Edition De
Luxe	10	6
St. George and the Dragon	5	0
Gallipoli	3	6
Maspero, Sir Gaston. Art in Egypt	10	0
Masson, Frederic. Napoleon and the Fair Sex	6	0
Matthews, T. The Biography of John Gibson, R.A.	10	6
Maud, C. E. Felicity in France	6	0
Maugham, William Somerset. The Explorer.
6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
The Play founded on the Novel. Cloth,
2s. 6dPaper	1	6
Jack Straw. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
Lady Frederick. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
The Land of the Blessed Virgin	6	0

Landed Gentry. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
The Magician. 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
A Man of Honour. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
The Merry-Go-Round. 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
The Moon and Sixpence	7	0
Mrs. Craddock	6	0
Mrs. Dot. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
Of Human Bondage	6	0
Penelope. Cloth, 2s. 6d Paper	1	6
Smith. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
The Tenth Man. Cloth, 2s: 6dPaper	1	6
Maugras, Gaston and Cte. P. de Croze-Lemercier. Memoirs of Delphine de Sabran, Marquise de
Custine	10	0
Mauthner, Fritz. (See under "Illustrated Cameos of Literature.")
Mawson, Sir Doughlas D.Sc., B.E. The Home of	0.00
the Blizzard2 vols.	36	0
Mayreder, Rosa. A Survey of Woman's Problem	5	0
McCabe, Joseph. Can We Disarm?	2	6
McCarthy, Justin H. If I Were King	6	0
McCollam, Wm. C. Vines and How to Grow Them	2	6
McFall, Capt. Crawford. With the Zhob Field	40	0
Force	18	0
McHugh, Hugh. John Henry	1	0
McTaggart, LtCol., D.S.O. Hints on Horsemanship	7	ű
Meakin, N. M. The Assassins	6	0
Mears, E. Grimwood. The Destruction of Belgium	_	_
Paper	0	3
Melville. Lewis. Life and Letters of William
Beckford of Fonthill	15	0
Merriman, H. Seton and Tallentyre, S. G. From
Wisdom Court. Cloth, 3s. cdBoards	2	0
Metchnikoff, Elie. The Nature of Man	2	0
The Prolongation of Life	6	0
Metour, Eugene Paul. In the Wake of the Green
Banner	6	0
Meynell, Alice. The Work of John S. Sargent, R.A.	£6 6	0
Fifty copies with duplicate set of plates on Japanese paper £	12 12	S-

Fifty copies with triplicate set of plates on
Japan and India paper	£21	0
Michael Angelo. (See "Rolland.")
Michel, André. Puvis de Chavannes	3	6
Michel, Emile. Great Masters of Landscape
Painting	30	0
Rembrandt, Harmensz Van Ryn. A
Memorial of his Tercentenary	30	0
Rubens: His Life, his Work, and his Time		0
Middleton, Edgar C. ("An Air Pilot.") The
Way of the Air	2	6
Migeon, Gaston. In Japan	6	0
Mikkelsen, Ejnar. Lost in the Arctic	18	0
Miller, Mary Rogers. The Brook Book	5	0
Milner, Lord. (See " Iwan Müller.")		v
Mirabeau. (See "Barthou.")
Mitchell, John R. M.D. Self-Help for Nervous
Women.	2	6
Mitchell, P. Chalmers, M.A., LL.D., D.Sc., F.R.S.,	~	U
F.Z.S. The Childhood of Animals	10	0
Mitford, Bertram. A Romance of the Cape	10	U
Frontier	3	6
'Tween Snow and Fire	3	6
Mockler-Ferryman, Major A. F. Annals of	9	U
Sandhurst	5	0
Modern Criminal Science Series.	,	U
I. Modern Theories of Criminality, by C.
Bernaldo de Quiros	1.4	^
II. Criminal Psychology, by Hans Gross	14 17	0
III. Crime: Its Causes and Remedies, by	11	0
Cesare Lombroso	10	٥
IV. The Individualization of Punishment.	16	0
by Raymond Saleilles	10
V. Penal Philosophy, by Gabriel Tarde	16	0
V. Fenal Philosophy, by Gabriel Tarde	20	0
VI. Crime and its Repression, by Gustave		_
Aschaffenburg	14	0
VII. Criminology, by Raffæle Garofalo	16	0
VIII. Criminality and Economic Conditions,		_
by William Adrian Bonger	21	0
Molander, Harold. The Fortune-Hunter	6	0
Monk, Thymol. An Altar. Cloth. 3sPaper	2	6

Montessori, Dr. Maria. The Advanced Montessori
Method2 vols.	21	0
Vol. I. Spontaneous Activity in Education ,, II. The Montessori Material for Children	8	6
up to Eleven Years	12	6
Dr. Montessori's Own Handbook	5	0
The Montessori Method	8	6
Pedagogical Anthropology	14	0
Moore, George. Confessions of a Young Man	7	0
Esther Waters	2	6
Hail and Farewell. An Autobiography in three volumes. (1) Ave. (2) Salve. (3) Vale.
Each vol.	7	0
The Lake	3	6
Lewis Seymour and Some Women	7	0
Memoirs of My Dead Life	7	0
The Mummer's Wife	7	0
Muslin	7	0
The Untilled Field	7	0
Moore, Mabel. Days in Hellas	6	0
Mordaunt, Eleanor. The Cost of It	6	0
The Garden of Contentment	2	6
The Island	6	0
Lu of the Ranges	6	0
A Ship of Solace. 3s. 6d	2	0
Moreau-Vauthier, Charles. The Technique of
Painting	10	6
Morgan, Pierpont J. (See "Hovey.")
Moul, Edmund D. The British Case in French Congo; the Story of a Great Injustice, its Causes and its Lessons	6	0
Muntz, Eugene. Leonardo da Vinci	-	-
Murray, Gilbert. Ancient Greek Literature	8	0
Carlyon Sahib. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
Outly on Sumb. Global, 25, 54, 11	_	Ĭ
Naidu, Sarojini. The Bird of Time	5	0
The Broken Wing; Songs of Love, Death, and Destiny	5	0
The Golden Threshold	3	6
Nansen, Fridtjof In Northern Mists. 2 vols	30	0
Through Siberia: The Land of the Future	15	0
Nash, Joseph. The Mansions of Old England	30	0

National History of France. Edited by Fr.
Funck-Brentano In 6 vols. Each vol.		j
Vol. I. The Century of the Renaissance, by Louis Batiffol.
,, II. The Eighteenth Century, by Casimir Stryienski.
,. III. The Revolution, by Lonis Madelin.
,, IV. The Great Century, by Jacques	s
Boulenger. (Shortly.)
,, V. The Middle Ages, by Fr. Funck-Brentano. (Shortly.)
,, VI. The Consulate and the Empire, by	,
Louis Madelin. (Shortly.)
National Loan Exhibitions. Illustrated Catalogue of the First National Loan Exhibition, 1909Limited Edition de Luxe)
An Illustrated Catalogue of the Second
National Loan Exhibition, 1913-1914.
Limited Edition	£2 2 ()
Nicholson, William. An Almanac of Twelve
Sports. Illustrated by William Nicholson.
Words by Rudyard KiplingBoards	2 6	5
An Alphabet. Boards, 5s. Library Ed., 12s. 6d.
Sets of the Plates) Characters of Romance)
London Types. Quatorzains by W. E. Henley.
Illustrated by William Nicholson. 5s.
Set of the Plates)
A Portrait of Lord Roberts)
The Square Book of Animals. Rhymes by Arthur Waugh. Plates by William
Nicholson. 5sLimited Ed.	12 6	j
Twelve Portraits. First Series, 21s. Second Series, 21sSeparate Portraits, each
Nietzsche, Frau Forster The Lonely Nietzsche	15 0
The Young Nietzsche	15 0 3 6
Noble, Edward. The Bottle-Fillers
Outposts of the Fleet	2 0
Nordau, Max. Degeneration. 17s Popular Ed.
Paradoxes	$\tilde{6}$ 0
Norman, M. E. Miss Pandora	5 0	1

Norman, Sir Henry, M.P. All the Russias	18	0
Norris, Frank. Vandover and the Brute	6	0
Norris. W. E. The Countess Radna	6	0
The Dancer in Yellow. 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
The Widower	- 6	0
Novikow, J. War and its Alleged Benefits	2	6
N. W. B. Penal Servitude	6	0
Nyrop, Christopher. France	1	0
Is War Civilisation?	3	6
Nystrom, Anton. Before, During, and After 1914	7	6
O. A. de. Indiscretions of Dr. Carstairs	6	0
Oakesmith, John. Race and Nationality	10	6
O'Brien, Lieut. Pat. Outwitting the Hun	6	0
Oemler, M. The Butterfly Man	6	0
Okie, H. P. America and the German Peril	2	6
Osbourne, Lloyd. The Adventurer. 6s.
Cheaper Ed.	2	0
Baby Bullet, the Motor of Destiny	6	0
Love the Fiddler	6	0
The Queen versus Billy and other Stories	6 6	0
Wild Justice	ь	0
of Literature.")
Oswell, W. E. William Cotton Oswell, Hunter and Explorer	25	0
Our Just Cause. Facts about the War for Ready		X
Reference	0	6
Page, Thomas Nelson. Gordon Keith	6	0
Paget, Right Hon. Sir Arthur, G.C.B. The
Paget Papers	30	0
Palacio-Valdes, A. Froth. Cloth 3s. 6d Paper	2	6
The Grandee. Cloth 3s. 6dPaper	2	6
Parker, Sir Gilbert. Donovan Pasha and some
People of Egypt	6	0
A Ladder of Swords	6	0
The Lane that had no Turning	6	0
The Right of Way	6	0
The Weavers	6	0
The World for Sale	O	U

Parrish, Gladys. Carfrae's Comedy	6	0
Pasolini, Count Pier Desiderio. Catherine Sforza	16	0
Pater, Walter. (See "Contemporary Men of Letters.")
Paterson, Arthur. The King's Agent	6	0
Patterson, J. E. Love Like the Sea	6	0
Lure of the Sea	5	0
The Sea's Anthology. Cloth, 2s Leather	3	0
The Story of Stephen Compton	6	0
Tillers of the Soil	6	0
Peake, Elmore Elliott. The Darlingtons	4	0
Peake, C. M. A. Eli	7	0
Pearce, J. H. Ezekiel's Sin	6	0
Inconsequent Lives	3	6
Peattie, Elia W. The Beleaguered Forest	4	0
Pendered, M. L. A Pastoral Played Out	6	0
Pennell, E. R. and J. The Life of James McNeill
Whistlerlllustrated	12	6
Pennell, Elizabeth Robins. The Lovers	2	6
Pennell, Joseph. The Jew at Home	5	0
Pictures in the Land of Temples	5	0
Pictures of War Work in England	6	0
Pictures of the Wonder of Work	7	6
Perry, Walter Copland. The Women of Homer	6	0
Peter the Great. (See "Waliszewski.")
Phelps, E. S. The Master of the Magicians	3	6
Philips, David. The Hungry Heart	3	0
Philips, Major G. P. A. On Active Service	2	6
Phillpott, Antony J. The Quest for Dean
Bridgman Connor	6	0
Philipotts, Eden. Brunel's Tower	6	0
The Green Alleys	6	()
Old Delabole	6	0
Plain Song: 1914 to 1916	3	6
The Spinners .:	7	0
Storm in a Teacup	7	0
The Whirlwind	2	0
Pinero, Sir Arthur W. The Amazons. Cloth, 2s. 6d.
Paper	1	6
The Benefit of the Doubt. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Paper	1	6
The Big Drum. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6

The Cabinet Minister. Cloth, 2s. 6d Paper	1	6
Dandy Dick. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
The Gay Lord Quex. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Paper,
1s. 6d. Limited Ed.	10	0
The Hobby Horse. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
His House in Order. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
Iris. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
Lady Bountiful. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
Letty. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
The Magistrate. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
Mid-Channel. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
The Mind the Paint Girl. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Paper	1	6
The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith. Cloth, 2s. 6d.
Paper	1	6
Preserving Mr. Panmure. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Paper	1	6
The Princess and the Butterfly. Cloth, 2s. 6d.
Paper	1	6
The Profligate. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
The Schoolmistress. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
The Second Mrs. Tanqueray. Cloth, 2s. 6d.
Paper, 1s. 6d. Library Ed., 5s.	1	6
Sweet Lavender. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper The Thunderbolt. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper	1	6
	1	6
The Times. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper Trelawney of the Wells. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Paper	1	6
	1	6
The Weaker Sex. Cloth, 2s. 6dPaper A Wife Without a Smile, Cloth, 2s. 6d. Paper	1	6
	1	U
Pinloche, A. Pestalozzi and the Foundation of	5	Λ
the Modern Elementary School	9	0
Pinturicchio. (See "Ricci.")	0
Pitt-Rivers, George. Conscience and Fanaticism	6	0
"Platoon Commander." With My Regiment:	3	c
From the Aisne to La Bassee	9	6
Pollard, Perceval. Masks and Minstrels of New	5	0
Germany	9	U
Pollen, Mrs. John Hungerford. Seven Centuries	30	0
of Lace	3	0 6
Powell, E. Alexander. Vive La France With the Italians and the Allies in the West	5 5	0.
Powell, I. Z. Chrysanthemums and How to Grow	J	U :
	2	6
Them	~	U

Powys, John Cowper. Wood and Stone	6	0
Prentice, William Kelly. Greek and Latin
Inscriptions	£3 3	0
(See also "Butler" and "Littman.")
Price, F. C. Lord Kentwell's Love Affair	3	0
Prichard, H. Hesketh, F.R.G.S. Hunting Camps
in Wood and Wilderness	15	0
Through Trackless Labrador	15	0
Prichard, K. and H. Hesketh. The Cahusac
Mystery	6	0
Pritchard, Martin J. Without Sin	6	0
Prosper, James. The Mountain Apart	6	0
Prowse, R. O. James Hurd	6	0
Pugh, Edwin W. A Street in Suburbia. Cloth, 3s.
Paper	2	G
Tony Drum. 6sCheaper Ed.	1	0
Puliga, Countess. My Father and I	6	0
Querdec, Yves, Le. Letters of a Country Vicar	5	0
Quincey, Thomas De. The Posthumous Works of Thomas De Quincey. 2 volsEach vol.	6	0
Vol. I. Suspira De Profundis and other Essays.
,, II. Conversations and Coleridge with other Essays
De Quincey Memorials2 vols.	30	0
Ouiros, C. B., De. (See "Modern Criminal Science Series.'')
· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
Rackham, Arthur. Æsop's Fables. Illustrated
by Arthur Rackham	6	0
Cinderella	7	G
Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, by Lewis
Carroll. Illustrated by Arthur Rackham	6	0
The Allies' Fairy Book. Illustrated by
Arthur Rackham	6	0
Arthur Rackham's Book of Pictures. £1 1s.
Large Paper Ed.	£2_2	0
A Christmas Carol, by Charles Dickens.
Illustrated by Arthur Rackham. 6s.	00.0	^
Large Paper Ed.	24 2	U

The Ingoldsby Legends of Mirth and Marvels, by Thomas Ingoldsby, Esq. (R. H.
Barham). Illustrated by Arthur Rackham	21	0
The Ring of the Niblung, by Richard Wagner.
Illustrated by Arthur Rackham, Each
vol.		0
Vol. I. Rhinegold and the Valkyrie.		•
, II. Siegfried and the Twilight of the Gods.
A Midsummer Night's Dream, by William Shakespeare. Illustrated by Arthur
Rackham	21	0
Mother Goose. Illustrated by Arthur		0
Rackham, 6sLarge Paper Ed.	25	0
Rip Van Winkle, by Washington Irving. 21s.	~0	U
Popular Ed.	6	0
Springtide of Life, by A. C. Swinburne	10	6
Undine, by De Lee Motte Fouqué. Illus-	10	U
trated by Arthur Rackham	10	6
Raeburn, Sir Henry. (See "Armstrong.")	10	G
Raleigh, Professor Walter. In Memoriam.
James McNeill Whistler	1	0
Rawnsley, Hardwicke, D. Notes for the Nile	5	0
Raynor, Cecil. The Spinster's Scrip	2	6
Reay, Col. W. T. Take Cover	5	0
Récamler, Madame. (See "Herriot.")
Redgrove, H. S., B.Sc., F.C.S. Experimental
Mensuration	2	6
Rees, Arthur J. The Merry Marauders	6	0
Rees, Claude. Chun-ti-Kung	6	0
Reeves, Amber. Reward of Virtue	6	0
Reinach, Dr. Salomon. Apollo	7	6
Orpheus	8	6
Rembrandt. (See "Michel," "Wedmore," also	U	Ü
"Great Engravers.")
Renan, Ernest. Studies of Religious_History	7	6
Revermort, J. A. The Marrying of Hester	•	U
Rainsbrook	6	0
Reynolds, Sir Joshua. (See "Armstrong.")	U	U
Riccl, Commendatore, Corrado. Antonio Allegri
	2 9 9	۸
da Correggio	* 4 4	v

Art in Northern Italy	10	0
Pinturicchio£	4 4	0
Ricci, Elisa. Old Italian Lace vols. £	6 8	0
Ricci, Seymour de. Louis XVI Furniture	25	0
Richardson, H. H. The Fortunes of Richard
Mahony	6	0
Maurice Guest	6	0
Richet, Charles. War Nursing	3	6
Richter, Dr. The Word of the Lord upon the Waters	2	6
Riddell, Mrs. J. H. The Head of the Firm	2	0
Riedl, Frederick. Hungarian Literature	6	0
Rives, Amélie. According to St. John	3	6
Rivoira, Comm. G. T. Lombardic Architecture £
Roberts, A. A. The Poison War	5	0
Roberts, Baron von. Lou. Cloth, 3s. 6d.	_	_
Paper, 2s. 6d. Popular Ed.	1	6
Robertson, W. Graham, French Songs of Old		_
Canada£1
Pinkie and the Fairies. Cloth, 2sPaper	1	0
Robins, Elizabeth (C. E. Raimond). Below the		^
Salt	6 6	0
A Dark Lantern	6	0
George Mandeville's Husband, Cloth, 3s.	O	U
Paper	2	6
The Magnetic North. 6sCheaper Ed.	$\tilde{\frac{2}{2}}$	0
The New Moon. 3sPaper	2	6
The Open Question	6	0
Where Are You Going To?	6	0
Robinson, Charles. The Four Gardens, by	·	_
"Handasyde." Illustrated by Charles Robinson	6	0
The Secret Garden, by Frances Hodgson
Burnett. Illustrated by Charles Robinson	7	6
The Sensitive Plant, by Percy Byssche
Shelley. Illustrated by Charles Robiuson.
15s. New and Cheaper Ed.	7	6
Our Sentimental Garden, by Agnes and Egerton Castle. Illustrated by Charles
Robinson	6	0
Robinson, E. Kay. The Country Day by Day	6	0

Robinson, F. Mabel. Chimaera	6	0
Robinson, H. Perry. Essence of Honeymoon	6	0
Of Distinguished Animals	6	0
The Turning Point	6	0
Rockefeller, John D. Random Reminiscences of
Men and Events	6	0
Rodocanachi, E. The Roman Capitol in Ancient and Modern Times	4	0
Tolla, the Courtesan	6	0
Rolland, Romain. John Christopher.
Vol. I. Dawn and Morning	6	0
,, II. Storm and Stress	6	0
,, III. John Christopher in Paris	6	0
,, IV. The Journey's End	6	0
Rooses, Max Art in Flanders	10	0
Roosevelt, Theodore. (See "Washburn.")
Ross, Percy. Youth Unconquerable	6	0
Rostand, Edmond. Cyrano de Bergerac. Cloth,	•	Ī
2s. 6d. Paper	1	6
The Fantasticks. Cloth, 2s, 6dPaper	1	6
(See "Shepherd.")	-	•
Rostrevor, George. Escape and Fantasy	3	6
Rousseau, J. J. (See "Lemaître.")
Dechama (Coo (Michal ?)
Russell, Earl. Divorce	2	6
"Russian Lady," A. Michail: The Heart of a
Russian	6	0
Rye, Mrs. Francis. The Beloved Son	2	6
Saintsbury, George. Corrected Impressions	7
Salanian, Joseph. The Arbitrators' Manual	3	в
Salaman, Malcolm. French Colour Prints of the Eighteenth Century
Also in White Buckram.	£2 12	6
Woman through a Man's Eyeglass.
Saleeby, C. W., M.D., F.R.C.S. Woman and
Womanhood	10	0
Saleilles, R. (See "Modern Criminal Science
Series.")		_
Sandeman, George. Social Renewal		6
Uncle Gregory	6	0

Sargent, John S., R.A. The Work of. (See "Alice Meynell.")
Sarolea, Charles, Ph.D., Litt.D. Europe's Debt to Russia	3	6
How Belgium Saved Europe. Cloth, 2s. 6d.	0
Paper	2	0
Sassoon, Siegfried. Counter Attack and other	0	0
Poems	2 5	6
	_	0
War Poems (Collected Ed.) Schiller. Poems	5 6	0
Scoble, John, and Abercombie, H. R. The Rise	U	U
and Fall of Krugerism. 10sPopular Ed.	2	6
Sedgwick, A. D. The Dull Miss Archinard	2	0
Seignobos, Charles. A Political History of Con-		Ĭ temporary Europe from 1814 to 1900. 10s.
New and Cheaper Ed.	6	0
Serao, Matilde. The Conquest of Rome	6	0
Fantasy: A Novel. Ss. 6d	2	6
Farewell, Love! A Novel. 3s. 6dPaper	2	6
In the Country of Jesus	6	0
Sergeant, Adeline. Out of Due Season	2
The Story of a Penitent Soul	6	0
The Surrender of Margaret Bellarmine	2	0
Sforza, Catherine. (See "Pasoline.")
Shackleton, Sir E. H., C.V.O. South, The
Story of Shackleton's Last Expedition, 1914-1917	25	0
The Heart of the Antarctic. Edition De Luxe,
Vellum, £10 10s New and Revised Ed.	6	0
Shackleton in the Antarctic	1	6
Scientific Reports of the British Antarctic
Expedition, 1907—1909.
Biology. Vol. I. 7 parts.
Biology. Vol. II. 4 partsPaper Boards	£3 3	0
Biology. Vol. I. Part I. On Collecting at
Cape Royds, by James Murray	1	6
Part II. On Microscopic Life at Cape	-
Royds, by James Murray	5	0
Part III. Antartic Rotifera, by James
Murray	5	0
Part IV. Musci, by James Cardot Part V. Tardigrada, by James Murray	1	-
Part V. Tardigrada, by James Murray	10	0

Part VI. Rhizopodes D'Eau Douce, by
Eugène Penard	3	0
Part VII. Fresh-Water Algæ, by W.
West, and G. S. West	3	0
Biology. Vol. I. Parts I-IV. Bound in 1 vol.	12	6
Biology. Vol. II. Part I. Mollusca, by Charles
Hedley	1	6
Part II. Antartic Fishes, by Edgar R.
Waite	1	6
Part III. Mallophages, by Professor L.
G. Neumann	1	6
Part IV. Astèries, Ophiures, et Echin-
oides, by R. Koehler	5	0
Geology. Vol. I. Glaciology, Physiography, Stratigraphy, and Tectonic Geology of South Victoria Land. By Prof. T. W.
Edgeworth David, C.M.G., F.R.S., M.A.,
and Raymond E. Priestley, F.G.S.
With short notes on Palæontology by T.
G. Taylor, B.A., B.E., B.Sc., and Prof.
E. H. Goddard, D.Sc. Paper £3 3s. net.
Cloth &	23 13	6
Geology. Vol. II. Contributions to the Palæontology and Petrology of South
Victoria Land. By W. N. Benson, B.Sc.;
F. Chapman, A.L.S., F.R.M.S.; Miss F.
Cohen, B.A., B.Sc.; L. A. Cotton, B.A.,
B.Sc.; C. Hedley, F.L.S.; H. I. Jensen,
D.Sc.; D. Mawson, D.Sc., B. E.; Prof.
E. W. Skeat, D.Sc.; J. Allan Thomson,
M.A., D.Sc.; A. R. Walkom, B.Sc.; Prof.
W. G. Woolnough, D.Sc.	00.0	۸
Paper boards, net	ಪ ರ ರ	U
Shakespeare, William. All the Tales from
Shakespeare, by Charles and Mary Lamb and	01	۵
H. S. Morris2 vols.	21	0
H. S. Morris2 vols. Shakespeare. The Works of William Shakes-
H. S. Morris	21	0 0
H. S. Morris
H. S. Morris

Sharp. In 5 vols	5	0
II. Studies and Appreciations.
III. Papers Critical and Reminiscent.
IV. Literary, Geography and Travel Sketches.
V. Vistas. The Gipsy Christ and other Prose Imaginings.
Sharp. Poems. (See under "Fiona Macleod.")
Sharp, Mrs. W. A Memoir of William Sharp.
(Fiona Macleod)2 vols.	10	0
Shaw, Byam. The Adventures of Akbar, by F. A.
Steel. Illustrated by Byam Shaw	6	0
The Garden of Kama, by Laurence Hope.
Illustrated by Byam Shaw	21	0
Shelley, Percy Bysshe. The Sensitive Plant. 15s.
Cheaper Ed.	7	6
Shepherd, J. A. The Story of Chanticleer, by
Edmond Rostand. Illustrated by J. A. Shepherd	6	0
Sheridan, R. B. (See "Heinemann's Favourite Classics.")
Sheringham, Hugh, and Meakin, Nevill. The Court of Sacharissa	6	0
Short, Ernest H. A History of Sculpture	6	ŏ
Sinclair, Upton. The Fasting Cure	2	6
The Industrial Republic	6	0
The Journal of Arthur Stirling	6	0
King Midas	6	0
Love's Pilgrimage	6	0
Slade, Dorothea. Gutter-Babies	6	0
Smith, F. Hopkinson. At Close Range	6	0
Smith, John Raphael. (See "Great Engravers.")	U	U
Soto, Hernando de. (See "Graham R. Cunning-hame.")
Southey, Robert. Journal of a Tour in the Netherlands in the Autumu of 1815	6	0
Spottiswoode, Sybil. Hedwig in England	3	0
Her Husband's Country	6	0
Marcia in Germany. 6sCheaper Ed.	1	0
Sprigg, S. Squire. Medicine and the Public	6	0
Stanley, Sidney. Serbian Fairy Tales. Illustrated	·	0
by Sidney Stanley	6	0
~; ~: ~: ~: · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	•	,

Steel, Flora Annie. The Adventures of Akbar.
Illustrated by Byam Shaw	6	0
The Complete Indian Housekeeper and Cook	6	0
The Flower of Forgiveness	6	0
From the Five Rivers	6	0
The Gift of the Gods. 3s. 6d	2	0
The Hosts of the Lord	3	6
In the Guardianship of God	6	0
In the Permanent Way and other Stories. 6s.
Cheaper Ed.	3	6
King-Errant	6	0
Marmaduke	6	0
The Mercy of the Lord	6	0
Miss Stuart's Legacy. 6sCheaper Ed.	1	0
Mistress of Men	6	0
The Potter's Thumb	6	0
A Prince of Dreamers	6	0
A Sovereign Remedy. 6sCheaper Ed.	3	6
Voices in the Night	6	0
Steffens, Lincoln. The Shame of the Cities	5	0
Stenger, Gilbert. The Return of Louis XVIII	10	0
Stephen, Sir Herbert. Prisoners on Oath	1	0
Stevenson - Hamilton, Major J. F.R.G.S.	•	0
Animal Life in Africa	18	0
Stevenson, R. L. St. Ives: Being the Adventures of a French Prisoner in England. Cloth, 3s.
Leather	4	6
Stevenson, R. L., and Osbourne, Lloyd. The Ebb-Tide. Large type, fine paper Ed. Cloth,
3s. Leather, 4s. 6dCheaper Ed.	2	0
Stoker, Bram. The Jewel of the Seven Stars	6	0
Lady Athlyne	6	0
The Mystery of the Sea	6	0
Personal Reminiscenes of Henry Irving	25	0
Stopes, Marie C. Man and other Poems	3	6
The Plays of Old Japan. "The No."	5	0
Street, G. S. At Home in the War	3	6
Strylenski, Casimir. (See "National History of France.")
Sukloff, Marie. The Life Story of a Russian Exile	б	0
Sullivan, Edmund J. The Kaiser's Garland	6	0

Swann, Duncan. The Book of a Bachelor. 6s.
Cheaper Ed.	3	6
A Country House Comedy	6	0
The Magic of the Hill	6	0
Molyneux of Mayfair. 6sCheaper Ed.	3	6
Swift, Benjamin. Dartnell. 3sPaper	2	6
Swinburne. The Works of Algernon Charles
Swinburne. Collected Editions. Collected
Poems in 6 volsThe set	45	0
1. Poems and Ballads. 1st Series.
2. Songs before Sunrise and Songs of Two Nations,
8. Poems and Ballads. 2nd and 3rd Series
Songs of the Springtides. 4. Tristram of Lyonesse. The Tale of Balen.
Atalanta in Calydon and Erechthens.
5. Studies in Song. A Century of Roundels.
Sonnets on English Dramatic Poets.
The Heptalogia, etc.
6. A Midsummer Holiday. Astrophel. A
Channel Passage and other Poems.
Swinburne, Algernon Charles. Collected Tragedies
5 vols.	30	0
Vol. I. The Queen Mother and Rosamond.
,, II. Chastelard and Bothwell. Acts I and II.
,, III. Bothwell. Acts III, IV, and V.
,, IV. Mary Stuart.
" V. Locrine; The Sisters; Marino Faliero; Rosamund, Queen of the Lombards.
The "Golden Pine" Series. Each vol. Cloth,
4sLeather	6	0
Vol. I. Poems and Ballads. 1st Series.	·	•
,, II. Poems and Ballads. 2nd and 3rd
Series.
,, III. Atalanta in Cayldon and Erechtheus.
,, IV. Tristram of Lyonesse.
,, V. Songs before Sunrise.
,, VI. A Study of Shakespeare.
Selections from Swinburne	6	0

SEPARATE EDITIONS.

Fiction.

2 00000.00
Love's Cross-Currents	6	0
Plays.
Bothwell	12	6
Chastelard	7	0
The Duke of Gandia	5	0
Locrine	6	0
Marino Faliero	6	0
Mary Stuart	8	0
The Queen Mother and Rosamond	7	6
Rosamund, Queen of the Lombards	6	0
The Sisters	6	0
Poems.
Atalanta in Calydon	6	0
Astrophel and other Poems	7	0
A Century of Roundels	6	0
A Channel Passage and other Poems	7	0
Dolores	1	0
Erechtheus	6	0
A Midsummer Holiday and other Poems	7	0
Poems and Ballads. 1st Series. 9s. Cheaper		•
Ed.	6	0
Poems and Ballads. 2nd Series Poems and Ballads. 3rd Series	9	0
The Posthumous Poems of A. C. Swinburne	30	0
Selections from the Poetical Works of A. C.	50	U
Swinburne	6	0
Vellum	36	0
Songs of the Springtides	6	0
Songs of Two Nations. I. A Song of Italy.		•
II. Ode on the Proclamation of the French
Republic. III. Dirae	3	0
The Springtide of Life. Poems of Childhood.
Illustrated by Arthur Rackham	10	6
Studies in Song	7	0
The Tale of Balen	7	0
Tristram of Lyonesse and other Poems	9	0
A Word for the Navy	0	1

Prose Works.
The Age of Shakespeare	6	0
Contemporaries of Shakespeare	7	0
Essays and Studies	12	0
Letters of Swinburne2 vols.	21	0
Miscellanies	12	0
A Note on Charlotte Bronte	6	0
Studies in Prose and Poetry	9	0
A Study of Ben Jonson	7	0
A Study of Shakespeare	8	0
A Study of Victor Hugo	6	0
William Blake: A Critical Essay	6	0
Symons, Arthur. The Fool of the World and other
Poems	5	0
Knave of Hearts	5	0
Images of Good and Evil	6	0
Poems2 vols.	10	0
Tragedies	5	0
Studies in Elizabethan Drama	6	0
Tadema, L. Alma. The Wings of Icarus. 3s.
Paper	2	в
Taft, William H. Political Issues and Outlooks	5	0
Talbot, F. A. Aeroplanes and Dirigibles of War	3	6
Lightships and Lighthouses	6	0
Moving Pictures	6	0
The Oil Conquest of the World	6	0
Practical Cinematography	3	6
The Railway Conquest of the World	6	0
The Steamship Conquest of the World	6	0
Submarines	3	6
The Wireless Conquest of the World	6	0
Talbot, P. Amaury. In the Shadow of the Bush	18	0
Tarde, Gabriel. (See "Modern Criminal Science
Series.")	C	0
Tarkington, Booth. The Guest of Quesnay	6	0
Tarbell, Ida M. The History of the Standard Oil
Company	24	_
Tasma. A Knight of the White Feather	2	0
The Penance of Portia James	2	0
Uncle Piper of Piper's Hill	3	€

Tchekov, Anton. The Steppe and other Stories	6	0
Tennant, Lady Pamela. The Children and the Pictures Village Notes and some other Papers	6	0
Village Notes and some other Papers	6	0
Tennyson, A. B. S. A Legend of Old Persia and other Poems	5	0
Tennyson, Alfred. A Portentous History	6	0
Tennyson, Alfred, Lord. (See "Heinemann's Favourite Classics.")
Thirlmere, Roland. The Clash of Empires	2	6
Thomas, Calvin. German Literature	6	0
Thomson, Basil. A Court Intrigue	6	0
Thornton, Catherine, and McLaughlin, Francis.	U	0
The Fothergills of Ravenstonedale: Their Lives and Letters	10	0
Thurston, R. H. Heat as a Form of Energy	5	0
Tobin, Agnes. The Flying Lesson	7	6
Love's Crucifix	12	6
On the Death of Madonna	7	6
Tolstoy, Count Leo. Anna Karenin. Translated	·	Ŭ
by C. Garnett	4	6
The Death of Ivan Ilyitch and other Stories.
Translated by C. Garnett	4	6
The Fruits of Enlightenment. 5s. Paper cover	1	6
War and Peace. Translated by C. Garnett	4	6
Work While Ye Have Light. 3s. 6d Paper	2	6
(See "Behrs.")	~	U
Toye, Francis. Diana and Two Symphonies	6	0
Tracy, Louis. The "Mind the Paint" Girl	6	0
Tree, Sir Herbert Beerbohm. Some Interesting
Fallacies of the Modern Stage	0	6
Trent, William P. American Literature	6	0
Triana, Santiago Pérez. The Pan-American	•
Financial Conference of 1915
Tucker, Beryl. The Man Who Lived	6	0
Turreney Ivan Novels Translated by Constance	•	•
Turgenev, Ivan. Novels. Translated by Constance Garnett. 15 vols. Edition limited to 250 copiesSold in sets only £	23 0	Δ
		U
Also sold separately.		•
I. Rudin. Cloth, 3sLeather	4	6
II. A House of Gentlefolk. Cloth, 3s.	4	c

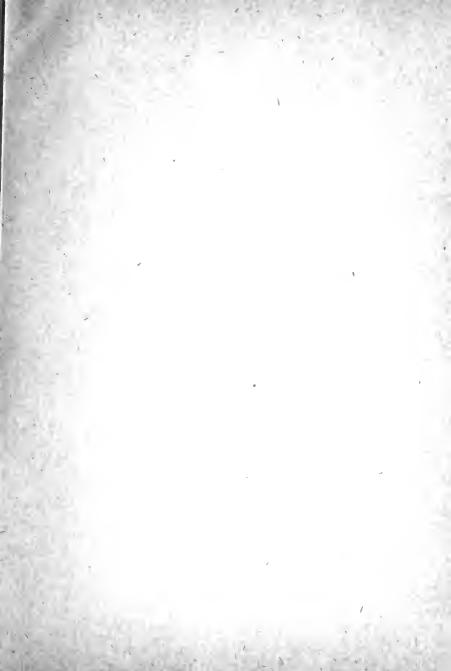

III. On the Eve. Cloth, 3sLeather	4	6
IV. Fathers and Children. Cloth, 3s. Leather	4	6
V. Smoke. Cloth, 3s Leather	4	6
VI-VII. Virgin Soil. 2 vols. (not sold separately). Each vol., cloth, 3sLeather	4	6 VIIIIX. A Sportsman's Sketch. 2 vols, (not sold separately). Each vol., cloth, 3s.
X. Dream Tales and Prose Poems. Cloth,	4	6
3s. Leather	4	6
XI. The Torrents of Spring, etc. Cloth, 3s.	-1	U
Leather	4	6
XII. A Lear of the Steppes, etc. Cloth, 3s.
Leather	4	6
XIII. The Diary of a Superfluous Man.
Cloth, 3s. Leather	4	в
XIV. A Desperate Character, etc. Cloth, 3s. Leather	4	6
XV. The Jew, etc. Cloth, 3sLeather	4	6
ir i inc out, co. Cloth, ob	1	U
Turley, Charles. A Band of Brothers	в	0
Godfrey Marten, Schoolboy	1	0
Godfrey Marten, Undergraduate	5	0
Maitland, Major and Minor	5 5	$\frac{0}{0}$
The Playmate	.)	U
Ular, Alexander. Russia from Within	8	6
Underhill, Evelyn. The Grey World	6	0
The Miracles of Our Lady Saint Mary	3	6
Upward, Allen. One of God's Dilemmas. 3s.	0
Paper Urban VI. (See "Baddeley.")	2	6
Uzanne, Octave. The Modern Parisienne	6	0
Ozamie, Octave. The Modern Tansiente	U
Valera, Juan. Dona Luz. 3s. 6dPaper	2	6
Pepita Jiménez. 3s. 6dPaper	2	6
Valloton, Benjamin. The Heart of Alsace	6	0
Potterat and the War	5	0
Empire	7	6
Van Dyck. (See "Great Engravers.")		U
•

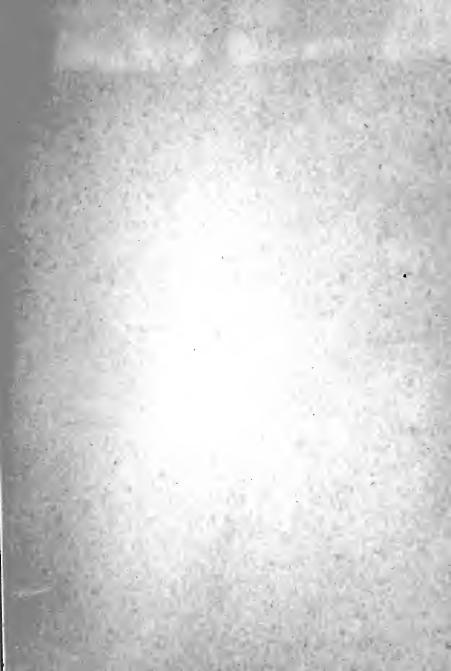

Van Eeden, Frederik. Little Johannes	3	0
Vansittart, Robert. The Singing Caravan	6	0
Van Vorst, Marie. Amanda of the Mill	6	0
Miss Desmond	6	0
Vassal, Gabriel. A Romance of the Western Front	6	0
Vazoff, Ivan. Under the Yoke	6	0
Verestchagin, Vassili. "1812." Napoleon I. in Russia	6	0
Vernède, R. E. War Poems and other Verses	3	6
Short Stories	6	0
Vinci, Leonardo Da. (See "Muntz.")		Ī
Vivian, E. Charles. Passion Fruit	6	0
		-
Voynich, E. L. The Gadfly. 6sCheaper Ed.	2	0
Jack Raymond	6	0
Olive Latham	6	0
Wagner. (See "Illustrated Cameos of Literature.")
Waliszewski, K. Marysienka	6	0
Russian Literature	6	0
The Story of a Throne (Catherine II. of Russia)	6	0
Poland the Unknown	6	0
Walton, G. L., M.D. Those Nerves	2	6
Why Worry?	2	6
War on German, Trade.	1	0
Ward, Herbert. A Voice from the Congo	10	0
Ware, Francis M. Driving	36	G
Warner, P. F. Cricket in Many Climes. 7s. 6d.
Popular Ed., 3s. 6d. Boards	2	6
Warnod, André. Prisoner of War	3	6
Washburn, Charles G. Theodore Roosevelt	6	0
Waters, Mrs. W. J. The Cook's Decameron	2	6
Watson, Gilbert. Forbidden Ground	6	0
Watson, James. The Dog Book2 vols.	£2 2	0
Watson, Kathleen. Later Litanies	2	6
Litanies of Life	2	6
Watteau, Boucher. (See "Great Engravers.")
Watts, Mrs. Roger. The Fine Art of Jujitsu	6	0
The Renaissance of the Greek Ideal	21	0
Waugh, Arthur. Alfred, Lord Tennyson. A		_
Study of his Life and Work	2	6

Wedmore, Frederick. Rembrandt, 17 of his Masterpieces, with an Essay by Frederick
WedmorePer set £1	2 12	0
Weed, C. M. Nature Biographies	5	0
Weininger, Otto. Sex and Character	10	0
Weltmeyer, H. Denmark, its History, Topography, Language, Literature, Fine Arts, Social Life,
and Finance	12	6
Wells, David Dwight. Her Ladyship's Elephant	3	6
His Lordship's Leopard	3	6
Parlous Times	4	0
Wells, H. G. The Island of Dr. Moreau. 3s. 6d.	1	6
The Time Machine	2	0
The War of the Worlds. 6sand	8	6
Wentworth, M. C. War Brides. A Play	1	6
West, A. F. Alcuin and the Rise of the Christian
Schools	5	0
Wharton, Anne Hollingworth. An English
Honeymoon	6	0
Whistler. An Illustrated Catalogue of the Whistler
Memorial Exhibition of 1905,Limited Ed.	£1 1	0
Whistler, James McNeill. The Gentle Art of Making Enemies	10	6
(See "Pennell, Raleigh.")
White, Percy. Andria	1	6
Whitlock, Brand. Belgium under German
Occupation2 vols.	25	0
Whitman, Sidney. German Memories	7	6
Turkish Memories	7	6
Whitney, Caspar. The Flowing Road	12	6
Whitney, Caspar. The Flowing Road	36	0
Wilberforce-Bell, Capt. H. The History of
Kathiawad	12	6
Wile, F. W. The Assault	6	0
Explaining the Britishers	3	6
Men Around the Kaiser. 6s. Cheaper Ed.
on Paper Boards	2	0
Wilkinson, Louis. A Chaste Man	6	0
Wilkinson, Spencer. From Cromwell to
Wellington	6	0
Williams, E. E. The Foreigner in the Farmyard	2	6
Made in Germany	2	6

Williams, Leonard. Granada: Memories, Adventures, Studies, and Impressions	7	6
Williams, Margery. The Late Returning	2	6
Spendthrift Summer	6	0
Willson, Beckles. The Life and Letters of James
Wolfe	18	0
Witt, Robert C. The Nation and its Art Treasures	1	0
Wolfe, James. (See "Willson.")
Wood, H. F. Avenged on Society	3	6
Woodbury, G. E. Swinburne	1	6
Woolson, G. A. Ferns and How to Grow Them	2	6
Worth, Nicholas. The Southerner	6	0
Wrench, G. T. The Grammar of Life	6	0
Wriothesley, W. The Ambassadress	6	O
Wyllarde, Dolf. The Story of Eden	2	0
Uriah the Hittite	2	0
Wyndham, Horace. The Queen's Service	3	6
Yates, Lucy H. Modern Housecraft	2	6
Yeats, W. B. (See "Contemporary Men of Letters.")	ت	U
	6	0
Young, E. H. A Corn of Wheat	6	0
Yonder	O	U
Pocket SeriesEach vol.	8	0
Collecting Old Glass.	.,	U
Collecting Old Miniatures.
Collecting Old Lustre Ware.
Confecting Old Edstre Wate.
Zangwill, Israel. Blind Children	5	0
The Celibates' Club	6	0
Children of the Ghetto	6	0
Dreamers of the Ghetto	6	0
Ghetto Comedies	6	0
Ghetto Tragedies	6	0
The Grey Wig	6	0
Italian Fantasies. Ss. 6dPopular Ed.	6	0
Jinny the Carrier	7	Õ
The King of Schnorrers	6	0
The Mantle of Elijah	6	0
The Master	6	0
The Melting Pot	2

The Next Religion	2	6
Plaster Saints	2	6
They that Walk in Darkness	6	0
The War for the World	6	0
The War God	2	6
Without Prejudice Essays	6	0
Zangwill, Louis. One's Womankind	6	0
Cleo the Magnificent	6	0
A Drama in Dutch	1	6
Zangwill, Israel, and Cowen, Israel. The
Premier and the Painter	6	0
Zola, Emile. The Attack on the Mill. 5s, and 3s. 6d.
Cheaper Ed.	2	6
Stories for Ninon	3	0
Zuccoli, Luciano. Light-Fingered Gentry	3	6

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LIBRARY Los Angeles

This book is DUE on the last date stamped below.

NOV 2 2 1961

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LOS ANGELES

Form L9-50m-7,'54(5990)444

PR Ashton -6001 Legend A82 1 DIC SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY

AA 000 373 466 2

NOV 2 7 1957

PR 6001 ^A82 1

